Lucille's Mistake.

The visit over, bidding her adieu, I took my hat and bowing low, withdrew. Then, starting homeward, soon I missed my cane, Retained my steps and rang the bell again. I heard a rust, the door flew open wide, And with a bound Lucille came to my side. Around my neck her lovely arms she threw, And kissed me, my soul's bliss, my life, my joy, my life.

The Story-Teller.

In a Powder Magazine.

We had not been many days at sea before my mind misgave me, and I began to dread an unfortunate termination to our voyage, for matters had gone wrong from the very beginning. There had been from the first a certain uneasiness, a certain idea that the vessel was not the proper state of man's existence; and who, as long as sixpence lasted, obstinately refused to go on board, in many cases, having to be hauled from the wharf where the side like so much suspended animation. Then when we had warped out in the river, and were lying waiting the captain, we found that he had taken sudden and violently ill, so that the vessel's delay followed, ending in a fresh appointment, and the coming of a new captain—a man of quiet, genial aspect, whose presence seemed to augur a termination to our troubles, and he was welcomed accordingly.

"We must run in on him, Master Ray."

"Could we not shoot him down through the sky-light?" said the chief mate; and then, as if blushing at his own proposition, he added hastily: "No, no; that would be like murder. We must dash in upon him at all risks. But what's that? Look out! He is coming on deck!"

How Peter Green was Scared out of Getting a Wife.

BY W. H. W.

The narrative which I am about to write was told me, one bleak, cold night, in a country parlor. It was one of those nights in midwinter, when the wind sweeps over the snow, and makes everything sing with its frosty breath, that I was sitting before a blazing fire, surrounded by a jolly half-dozen boys, and an old bachelor—Peter Green—about forty and eighty years old. It was just the kind of a night without to make those within enjoy a good story, so each of us had told his favorite story, save Mr. Green, and as he was a jolly old fellow we all looked forward to hear him say, "I know of no story that would interest you," so we had to find other entertainment for a while, when one of the boys told me to ask him how it happened that he never married. So I did.
