The Muses' Bower.

Ashes of Love.

Lay them low on the shining coals,
Pledges of love, whose perfumed folds
Near me smoky with Time's slow flight—
Stale as thy heart, with its waste and blight.

Too soon in I how the bright flames swirl!
Higher and higher they upward curl!
Cast them in I Note the scarlet glow
Made by the words of the long ago.

How loved and prized it matters not,
For the past is cold, and each word forgot.
Cast them in, though folded there,
Is a silken ring of un-brown hair.

The words were false, the dream was vain,
But kept and deep was the after-pain.
Hate, was the hand that laid me cold;
That wore the crown that had of gold;

And the eye with a sudden mist grows dim,
As no one is left with the thoughts of him.
Another scrip, my only one,
And the weary work is forever done.

There! the hungry blaze death meet thy hand!
To over now, till the spirit-band
Shall draw the veil from the past aside,
When we stand adjudged on the Jasper side.

The Story-Teller.

Determined to Win.

A BEAUTIFUL DOMESTIC STORY.

"Of all the things this is the worst! If I ever in my life expected to hear such news! Why, our George has gone and got married! Do you hear?"

Good Mrs. Clements pushed her steel-bowed spectacles off her bright eyes, and dropped her letter in her lap, and she turned round to her husband, the stout, clever old farmer who was contentedly sipping the old whisky.

"Deacon, do you hear?"

"This time, when she asked the question, there was a touch of sharpness in her voice.

"Yes, what if he is married? I'm sure it's natural enough. It kind of runs in the family 'pears to me."

But Mrs. Clements would take no notice of this little pleasantry.

"Well, if you like it, I can tell you I don't. He needn't think he's coming here with his fine, city-bred lady, all airs and graces, and flounces and fluted ruffles. There's plenty of good girls hereabout that wanted him. Right in the middle of work, too! To talk of bringing a lady here in 'hog-killing' time! I do declare! I think George is a fool!"

A graceful, dainty little lady in a garnet poplin and ruffled apron, with a small, proudly-poised head, covered with short, dusky curls, and a pair of dark blue eyes, so wistful and tender, a tiny rusebud of a mouth, and a simple in one pink cheek, was Mrs. Marion Clements. Was it any wonder that George had fallen in love with her?

She sat in her bright little parlor, close beside the lace curtained window, watching for the loved husband's return; and then when she heard the click of the latch-key in the hall, flew for the welcome.

"Haven't you got the letter this time, George? I've felt sure of it all day. Indeed, I've quite decided what dresses to take with me."

He smiled and shook his head.

A cloud passed over her pretty face.

"O, George, isn't it too bad? And I do believe—ah! I don't believe they will write because they are sorry you married me."

He put his arms around her neck.

"And supposing such to be the case, do you think it would make any difference to me?"

"Oh, no! only it would grieve me so if I had alienated your parents from you."

And so it was; for Marion would write because they were sorry you married me. They have never seen you! And when they know you they can't help loving you."

"O, George!"

And the exclamation was caused by the kiss accompanying his loving flattery.

"That's true as preaching. 'By-the-by, my dear, what would you say if the firm sent me off on a travelling tour of six weeks?"

A little dismayed cry answered him.

"You won't stay here alone, eh? But, Marion, it would be five hundred dollars clear gain to us."

"What need we care for money? I'd rather have you."

And so it was; for Marion played on the young man's lip; he was more matter-of-fact than this romantic, tender little wife of his.

I think the addition to our balance at the banker's would be very consoling for the absence. But never mind, little pet. Let's go down to dinner. I hope we'll get a letter from home soon."

And so it was; for Marion snatched it from his coat pocket the very next night. But her husband's face looked angry when she looked gratefully over the envelope.

"My dear, you must remember I care very little for what the letter contains. Remember, I did not write it; that you are dearest to me, that over here. Kiss me a little, while I watch you."

A little pang of misdeed troubled her when she glanced over the note; then tears stole from under her lashes, and George saw her tender mouth quiver and tremble; then when she had finished it, she laid her head down on his shoulder and cried.

"It was cruel to let you see it, my wounded birdie. Let me burn it. And don't forget, darling, what the Bible says, that a man shall leave his father and mother, and cleave unto his wife. You are my precious wife, Marion, and to you I turn for all the happiness my life will ever hold."

He dried her tears, and they talked it over.

"Just because I am city bred she thinks I am lazy and haughty, and dainty, and—"

"Never mind, Marion. She will find out some day. My father—"

"Yes, bless the dear old man. He has added 'My love to my daughter Marion.' Oh, I know I should love him, and your mother, too, if she would let me."

"We will invite them down when I come home. By the way, Marion, I will stop at the farm on my way home, and invite them down, and bring them home with me."

"George, dear, I have been thinking about that trip West. I think you had better go and leave me at home. It won't be so very long."

"So long! My true little Marion and when I come back I'll bring you a present. What shall it be?"

"Your mother and father from the farm. It shall be that hope that will bear me company when you are gone."

A fortnight after that Marion Clements

Traveler's Notes.

Letter from India.

DEAR EDITOR:—I think my last was sent you from Genoa, or perhaps Naples, and as I am still journeying I continue my jottings of travel, &c.

It may be of interest to your readers, among whom I count many of my old-time friends, to know how we wanderers from home and country live on this Italian steamer; how we spend our time, what we eat, &c. &c. Many of us are early risers—especially on the Red Sea—for which we do not claim any extra merit, because it was so hot in our cabins, even in December, that we could not sleep much. One night a number of passengers had carried their beds on deck and were sleeping in the open air, but before daylight a heavy rain came on and drove them in haste to their hot cabins.

About sunrise coffee and tea, with desiccated milk and crackers, are on the table for all who wish anything of the kind. The mornings are spent in walking, or never, and that on the various languages, &c. &c. At 9:30 o'clock the bell rings for breakfast, and when the sea is not too rough, all the passengers "in our set" (i. e. first-class, second-class passengers being served at a later hour) regard its call as effectual, and quickly surround the long table running the entire length of the cabin, and at the table various languages, &c. &c.
