The Misses' Bower.

Only a little lamb! But that don't care for me! In thy great coat, dear Lord, I ever ride with thee.

Dear Lord, in Heaven with Thee, My comfort thou art here, Till endless years are mine.

Dear Lord, in Heaven with Thee, My comfort thou art here, Till endless years are mine.

Dear Lord, in Heaven with Thee, My comfort thou art here, Till endless years are mine.

Dear Lord, in Heaven with Thee, My comfort thou art here, Till endless years are mine.

Dear Lord, in Heaven with Thee, My comfort thou art here, Till endless years are mine.

Dear Lord, in Heaven with Thee, My comfort thou art here, Till endless years are mine.

Reading for the Million.

BY MARK TWAIN. I got into the cars and took a seat in juxtaposition to a female. The female's face was a perfect insurance company for her-it insured her against ever getting married to anybody except a blind man.

Her mouth looked like a crack in a dried lemon, and she had no more expression than there is in a cup of cold custard. She appeared as if she had been through one famine and got about two-thirds through another.

She was old enough to be the great-grandmother to Mary that had a little lamb. She was chewing piece popcorn, and carried in her hand a yellow rose, while a handkerchief and cotton umbrella nestled sweetly by her side.

She hunched round uneasy like, then she raised her umbrella, and said, "I don't want any of your sass—get out!" and I got out.

Then I took a seat alongside a man full of nerve, who seemed to be a great deal more than he was. He was a stately cuss, and he was reading.

He took this for irony, and what little civility cordials there was between us and me, it turned out to be his chaplain of a base ball club.

When we got to Rochester I called for a bowl of bean soup. It ought to be called lead soup. I send you the recipe for what I call "lead soup."

Nothing can exceed the magnificence of that Northern region. Nothing in Italy, Spain, Greece or Egypt can at all be compared with them. These appearances are not peculiar to Lapland, but are common to the whole Arctic region.

Byron married Miss Milbank to get money to pay his debts. It turned out a bad shift.

A Puzzled Dutchman.

A Wisconsin secular paper contains the following good story: One who does not believe in immersion for baptism was holding a protracted meeting, and one night preached on the subject of baptism.

He carried this idea out fully, and in due season and style closed his discourse, when an invitation was given to any one who felt so disposed to rise and express their thoughts.

Mister Brecher, I wish so glad I wish here-to-night, for I have explained to my mind some things that I never believed before.

Robert Baras married a farm girl who he fell in love while they worked together in the plow field. He was irregular in his life, and committed the most serious mistakes in conducting his domestic affairs.

John Howard, the great philanthropist, married his nurse. She was altogether beneath him in social life and intellectual capacity.

Polliteness that Paid.

A LESSON FOR BOYS. "Commercial Mail, and German News" showed a ragged little fellow one afternoon lately, as he rushed through a street corner where he had just taken a seat.

He carried this idea out fully, and in due season and style closed his discourse, when an invitation was given to any one who felt so disposed to rise and express their thoughts.
