

The Huntingdon Journal.

J. R. DURBORROW, J. A. NASH, PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

Office on the Corner of Fifth and Washington streets.

THE HUNTINGDON JOURNAL is published every Wednesday, by J. R. DURBORROW & J. A. NASH, under the firm name of J. R. DURBORROW & Co., at $2.00 per annum, in advance, or $2.50 if not paid for in six months from date of subscription, and $3.00 if not paid within the year.

No paper discontinued, unless at the option of the publishers, until all arrearages are paid. No paper, however, will be sent out of the State unless absolutely paid for in advance.

Transient advertisements will be inserted at TWENTY AND A HALF CENTS per line for the first insertion, SEVEN AND A HALF CENTS for the second, and FIVE CENTS per line for all subsequent insertions.

Regular quarterly and yearly business advertisements will be inserted at the following rates:

1 inch	2 inch	3 inch	4 inch	5 inch	6 inch	7 inch	8 inch	9 inch	10 inch
10	20	30	40	50	60	70	80	90	100

Local notices will be inserted at FIFTEEN CENTS per line for each and every insertion.

All Resolutions of Societies, Communications of limited or individual interest, all party announcements, and notices of Marriages and Deaths, insertion, seven and a half cents for the second, and five cents for all subsequent insertions.

Legal and other notices will be charged to the party having them inserted, and are not collectable when the advertiser is once inserted.

JOB PRINTING of every kind, in Plain and Fancy Colors, done with neatness and dispatch. Labels, Bills, Cards, Pamphlets, &c., of every variety and style, printed at the shortest notice, and every thing in the Printing line will be executed in the most artistic manner and at the lowest rates.

Professional Cards.

A. P. W. JOHNSTON, Surveyor and Civil Engineer, Office: No. 113 Third Street, aug11, 1872.

D. R. H. W. BUCHANAN, DENTIST, No. 228 Hill Street, HUNTINGDON, PA., July 3, 72.

D. CALDWELL, Attorney-at-Law, No. 111, 34 street, Office formerly occupied by Messrs. Woods & Williamson, [ap19, 71.]

D. R. A. B. BRUMBAUGH, offers his professional services to the community. Office, No. 523 Washington street, one door east of the Catholic Parsonage. [Jan. 4, 71.]

E. J. GREENE, Dentist, Office removed to Leister's new building, Hill Street, [Jan. 4, 71.]

G. L. ROBB, Dentist, office in S. T. Brewer's new building, No. 529, Hill St., Huntingdon, Pa. [ap12, 71.]

H. C. MADDEN, Attorney-at-Law, Office, No. 1, Hill Street, Huntingdon, Pa. [ap19, 71.]

J. FRANKLIN SCHOCK, Attorney-at-Law, Huntingdon, Pa. Prompt attention given to all legal business. Office 229 Hill Street, corner of Court House Square. [Dec. 4, 72.]

J. SYLVANUS BLAIR, Attorney-at-Law, Huntingdon, Pa. Office, Hill Street, three doors west of Smith. [Jan. 4, 71.]

J. CHALMERS JACKSON, Attorney-at-Law, Office with F. W. Davis, Esq., No. 403, Hill Street, Huntingdon, Pa. All legal business promptly attended to. [Jan. 10, 71.]

J. R. DURBORROW, Attorney-at-Law, Huntingdon, Pa., will practice in the several Courts of Huntingdon county. Particular attention given to the settlement of estates of decedents. Office in the JOURNAL Building. [Feb. 1, 71.]

J. W. MAETERN, Attorney-at-Law and General Claim Agent, Huntingdon, Pa., Soldiers' claims against the Government for back pay, bounty, widows' and invalid pensions attended to with great care and promptness. Office on Hill Street. [Jan. 4, 71.]

L. S. GEISSINGER, Attorney-at-Law, Huntingdon, Pa. Office with Brown & Bailey. [Feb. 15, 71.]

K. ALLEN LLOYD, J. HALL MESSER, Attorneys-at-Law, Huntingdon, Pa. Special attention given to COLLECTIONS of all kinds; to the settlement of ESTATES, &c., and all other legal business prosecuted with fidelity and dispatch. [Nov. 6, 72.]

R. A. ORBISON, Attorney-at-Law, Office, 321 Hill Street, Huntingdon, Pa. [May 31, 71.]

JOHN SCOTT, S. T. BROWN, J. M. BAILEY, Attorneys-at-Law, Huntingdon, Pa. Pension and all claims of soldiers and soldiers' heirs against the Government will be promptly processed. Office on Hill Street. [Jan. 4, 71.]

WILLIAM A. FLEMING, Attorney-at-Law, Huntingdon, Pa. Special attention given to collections, and all other legal business attended to with care and promptness. Office, No. 229, Hill Street. [ap19, 71.]

Hotels.

MORRISON HOUSE, OPPOSITE PENNSYLVANIA R. R. DEPOT HUNTINGDON, PA. April 5, 1871-ly.

WASHINGTON HOTEL, S. S. BOWEN, Prop'r, Corner of Pitt & Juliana Sts., Bedford, Pa. may1.

Miscellaneous.

OYES! OYES! OYES! The subscriber holds himself in readiness to cry Sales and Auctions at the shortest notice. Having considerable experience in the business he feels assured that he can give satisfaction. Terms reasonable. Address G. J. HENRY, Merchants' Row, Saxton, Bedford county, Pa. [ap19, 71.]

H. ROBLEY, Merchant Tailor, in Leister's Building (see ad over), Huntingdon, Pa., respectfully solicits a share of public patronage from town and country. [Oct. 16, 72.]

R. A. BECK, Fashionable Barber and Hairdresser, Hill Street, opposite the Franklin House. All kinds of Tonic and Pomades kept on hand for sale. [ap19, 71-6m]

SHIRLEYSBURG ELECTRO-MEDICAL, Hydropathic and Orthopedic Institute, for the treatment of all Chronic Diseases and Deformities. Send for Circulars. Address GIBBETT, nov-27, 72[ap] Dr. BAIRD, Shirleysburg, Pa.

FOR PLAIN PRINTING, FANCY PRINTING, GO TO THE JOURNAL OFFICE

Printing.

TO ADVERTISERS:

Original Poetry.

Autumn.

BY THE BARD OF THE MOUNTAIN.

Now vanish the hot rays of summer. As autumn the golden appears, The western winds solemnly murmur, And blustering winter draws near.

The forest a hue of deep yellow Beneath the cool breezes assumes, The falling sun, hazy and mellow, The serene meadow faintly illumines.

October relieved by November, Frost-precipitated to Lethe may fly, And usher bleak, hoar December, Suggestive of heart's blazing bliss.

As nature puts off her green mantle And sheds her soft garment of white, She changes her aspect so gently, Thoughtful with shudders so bright.

Farwell to thy green shady bowers Sweet summer, thou season of bliss, Bright sunshine and heart-cheering flowers, Reluctant thy charms we dismiss.

Instinctively turning our vision We greet coming winter's approach, Who, though we appear to deplore, Congratulates the whole earth by his breath.

The Story-Teller.

ON THE TRAP.

I was only a clown, a painted, grinning clown, attached on a small salary to a theatre in the capital of one of the States into which Germany was divided before the genius and ambition of Bismark had effected its consolidation into the empire. My role was popular because everybody likes to laugh, and likes one who puts them in a laughing mood. My make-up was considered a marvel of perfection. My songs always took, and my gestures and grimaces never failed to elicit the most rapturous applause. It used to be said that my face must be made of India rubber, it could be twisted and distorted into such strong expressions. But I hated the life, and my success made it more and more distasteful.

One night I went home completely worn out in body and mind. My little sister Ada, fifteen years old, and light and graceful as a sylph, who was engaged as a danseuse at the same theatre, also seemed dispirited and worn. The play had been running forty nights, and the whole company was heartily sick of it. But it was not this alone which exerted a depressing influence on my spirits that evening. For many weeks I had been losing my heart to Fraulein Dora, the principal danseuse of the theatre, who was no less lovely in mind and heart than in her person. She was the most beautiful woman I had ever seen, tall, well formed, graceful, with a step like a fairy queen, large, thoughtful, woman eyes; and a sweet, winning smile. My first drew me to her was her kindness to my sister, whom she took every opportunity to befriend and assist in her profession. This was the more surprising, because Ada promised to become a dangerous rival; and in the theatrical profession, jealousy is the rule, and generosity the exception. So I learned to like Dora, and to feel that she was a woman who would do me good. All the gentry of the place fell in love with her, and raved about her beauty and her dancing, in a way that nearly drove me wild with jealousy. I was in love in the old-fashioned way we read of in novels—I am not ashamed to confess it—eager to kiss the ground on which she trod, and would not believe that any one else could love and worship her with the same devotion. I must not omit to say that Dora, in the midst of all this adulation, displayed the most discreet and modest behaviour. She was always attended to and from the theatre by her mother, and always returned the rich presents which were showered upon her.

Among all who paid court to Dora, I feared only one, the young rich, handsome, and accomplished Count Ernest von Walters, who pressed his suit with me, and tried to seduce her. What chance had the poor clown against this man? Yet I fancied if he were only out of the way I need not despair of winning her. Did she not love my sister, and had she not often spoken kindly to me, and praised my acting and singing? But this day I had learned the worst—that her kindness to me sprang only from a gentle and friendly feeling for the sister of the girl she had learned to love like a sister, and that she had promised to be the wife of Count von Walters. What wonder that I went to my lodgings with despair in my heart!

My little sister exerted herself to make things cheerful in our quiet sitting-room. She suspected nothing of the real cause of my downheartedness, for she, my confidant in everything else, had never been intrusted with the secret of my love for Dora; and she, the hope of drawing me out of my morose mood, prattled on about a number of unimportant matters. She was interrupted by a knock at the door, followed by the entrance of our landlady. The good soul apologized for coming in at so late an hour, but the postman had brought a letter for me just as I had left for the theatre, and as it bore a foreign post-mark, she thought it might be important. I should get it that evening. I thanked her mechanically, but a glance at the post-mark caused me to tear the letter open with eager and trembling fingers; for I had often heard my father speak of an only brother who had settled in England in early youth, and from whom vague reports came, from time to time, of a successful mercantile career. The letter was postmarked London, and the heavy black border lines told the story before the seal was broken. My uncle was dead. He had never married, and on his death-bed, remembering his only brother, he had left all his wealth to him or his children. For a moment I felt stunned and faint; and Ada, throwing her arms about my neck, begged me to tell her what had news was in my letter to make me look so strange and pale. I took her on my knee and told her we were rich, and would have no more need to act in the theatre. We would leave this miserable little town and go to Berlin.

To my surprise, Ada again put her arms about my neck, and whispered softly, "Need we leave the theatre immediately, dear brother?"

"No, child," said I, wondering what she could mean; "but tell me why you should want to stay another day, when you can leave at once and be free from this slavery?"

"Because, dear brother," she answered, hesitating and blushing, "Fraulein Dora told me I was a great deal prettier than she was, and a better dancer; and that I should have the first place in the new dance they are to put on the stage next week. Oh, I would like to have such a

Original Poetry.

Autumn.

BY THE BARD OF THE MOUNTAIN.

Now vanish the hot rays of summer. As autumn the golden appears, The western winds solemnly murmur, And blustering winter draws near.

The forest a hue of deep yellow Beneath the cool breezes assumes, The falling sun, hazy and mellow, The serene meadow faintly illumines.

October relieved by November, Frost-precipitated to Lethe may fly, And usher bleak, hoar December, Suggestive of heart's blazing bliss.

As nature puts off her green mantle And sheds her soft garment of white, She changes her aspect so gently, Thoughtful with shudders so bright.

Farwell to thy green shady bowers Sweet summer, thou season of bliss, Bright sunshine and heart-cheering flowers, Reluctant thy charms we dismiss.

Instinctively turning our vision We greet coming winter's approach, Who, though we appear to deplore, Congratulates the whole earth by his breath.

The Story-Teller.

ON THE TRAP.

I was only a clown, a painted, grinning clown, attached on a small salary to a theatre in the capital of one of the States into which Germany was divided before the genius and ambition of Bismark had effected its consolidation into the empire. My role was popular because everybody likes to laugh, and likes one who puts them in a laughing mood. My make-up was considered a marvel of perfection. My songs always took, and my gestures and grimaces never failed to elicit the most rapturous applause. It used to be said that my face must be made of India rubber, it could be twisted and distorted into such strong expressions. But I hated the life, and my success made it more and more distasteful.

One night I went home completely worn out in body and mind. My little sister Ada, fifteen years old, and light and graceful as a sylph, who was engaged as a danseuse at the same theatre, also seemed dispirited and worn. The play had been running forty nights, and the whole company was heartily sick of it. But it was not this alone which exerted a depressing influence on my spirits that evening. For many weeks I had been losing my heart to Fraulein Dora, the principal danseuse of the theatre, who was no less lovely in mind and heart than in her person. She was the most beautiful woman I had ever seen, tall, well formed, graceful, with a step like a fairy queen, large, thoughtful, woman eyes; and a sweet, winning smile. My first drew me to her was her kindness to my sister, whom she took every opportunity to befriend and assist in her profession. This was the more surprising, because Ada promised to become a dangerous rival; and in the theatrical profession, jealousy is the rule, and generosity the exception. So I learned to like Dora, and to feel that she was a woman who would do me good. All the gentry of the place fell in love with her, and raved about her beauty and her dancing, in a way that nearly drove me wild with jealousy. I was in love in the old-fashioned way we read of in novels—I am not ashamed to confess it—eager to kiss the ground on which she trod, and would not believe that any one else could love and worship her with the same devotion. I must not omit to say that Dora, in the midst of all this adulation, displayed the most discreet and modest behaviour. She was always attended to and from the theatre by her mother, and always returned the rich presents which were showered upon her.

Among all who paid court to Dora, I feared only one, the young rich, handsome, and accomplished Count Ernest von Walters, who pressed his suit with me, and tried to seduce her. What chance had the poor clown against this man? Yet I fancied if he were only out of the way I need not despair of winning her. Did she not love my sister, and had she not often spoken kindly to me, and praised my acting and singing? But this day I had learned the worst—that her kindness to me sprang only from a gentle and friendly feeling for the sister of the girl she had learned to love like a sister, and that she had promised to be the wife of Count von Walters. What wonder that I went to my lodgings with despair in my heart!

My little sister exerted herself to make things cheerful in our quiet sitting-room. She suspected nothing of the real cause of my downheartedness, for she, my confidant in everything else, had never been intrusted with the secret of my love for Dora; and she, the hope of drawing me out of my morose mood, prattled on about a number of unimportant matters. She was interrupted by a knock at the door, followed by the entrance of our landlady. The good soul apologized for coming in at so late an hour, but the postman had brought a letter for me just as I had left for the theatre, and as it bore a foreign post-mark, she thought it might be important. I should get it that evening. I thanked her mechanically, but a glance at the post-mark caused me to tear the letter open with eager and trembling fingers; for I had often heard my father speak of an only brother who had settled in England in early youth, and from whom vague reports came, from time to time, of a successful mercantile career. The letter was postmarked London, and the heavy black border lines told the story before the seal was broken. My uncle was dead. He had never married, and on his death-bed, remembering his only brother, he had left all his wealth to him or his children. For a moment I felt stunned and faint; and Ada, throwing her arms about my neck, begged me to tell her what had news was in my letter to make me look so strange and pale. I took her on my knee and told her we were rich, and would have no more need to act in the theatre. We would leave this miserable little town and go to Berlin.

To my surprise, Ada again put her arms about my neck, and whispered softly, "Need we leave the theatre immediately, dear brother?"

"No, child," said I, wondering what she could mean; "but tell me why you should want to stay another day, when you can leave at once and be free from this slavery?"

"Because, dear brother," she answered, hesitating and blushing, "Fraulein Dora told me I was a great deal prettier than she was, and a better dancer; and that I should have the first place in the new dance they are to put on the stage next week. Oh, I would like to have such a

Original Poetry.

Autumn.

BY THE BARD OF THE MOUNTAIN.

Now vanish the hot rays of summer. As autumn the golden appears, The western winds solemnly murmur, And blustering winter draws near.

The forest a hue of deep yellow Beneath the cool breezes assumes, The falling sun, hazy and mellow, The serene meadow faintly illumines.

October relieved by November, Frost-precipitated to Lethe may fly, And usher bleak, hoar December, Suggestive of heart's blazing bliss.

As nature puts off her green mantle And sheds her soft garment of white, She changes her aspect so gently, Thoughtful with shudders so bright.

Farwell to thy green shady bowers Sweet summer, thou season of bliss, Bright sunshine and heart-cheering flowers, Reluctant thy charms we dismiss.

Instinctively turning our vision We greet coming winter's approach, Who, though we appear to deplore, Congratulates the whole earth by his breath.

The Story-Teller.

ON THE TRAP.

I was only a clown, a painted, grinning clown, attached on a small salary to a theatre in the capital of one of the States into which Germany was divided before the genius and ambition of Bismark had effected its consolidation into the empire. My role was popular because everybody likes to laugh, and likes one who puts them in a laughing mood. My make-up was considered a marvel of perfection. My songs always took, and my gestures and grimaces never failed to elicit the most rapturous applause. It used to be said that my face must be made of India rubber, it could be twisted and distorted into such strong expressions. But I hated the life, and my success made it more and more distasteful.

One night I went home completely worn out in body and mind. My little sister Ada, fifteen years old, and light and graceful as a sylph, who was engaged as a danseuse at the same theatre, also seemed dispirited and worn. The play had been running forty nights, and the whole company was heartily sick of it. But it was not this alone which exerted a depressing influence on my spirits that evening. For many weeks I had been losing my heart to Fraulein Dora, the principal danseuse of the theatre, who was no less lovely in mind and heart than in her person. She was the most beautiful woman I had ever seen, tall, well formed, graceful, with a step like a fairy queen, large, thoughtful, woman eyes; and a sweet, winning smile. My first drew me to her was her kindness to my sister, whom she took every opportunity to befriend and assist in her profession. This was the more surprising, because Ada promised to become a dangerous rival; and in the theatrical profession, jealousy is the rule, and generosity the exception. So I learned to like Dora, and to feel that she was a woman who would do me good. All the gentry of the place fell in love with her, and raved about her beauty and her dancing, in a way that nearly drove me wild with jealousy. I was in love in the old-fashioned way we read of in novels—I am not ashamed to confess it—eager to kiss the ground on which she trod, and would not believe that any one else could love and worship her with the same devotion. I must not omit to say that Dora, in the midst of all this adulation, displayed the most discreet and modest behaviour. She was always attended to and from the theatre by her mother, and always returned the rich presents which were showered upon her.

Among all who paid court to Dora, I feared only one, the young rich, handsome, and accomplished Count Ernest von Walters, who pressed his suit with me, and tried to seduce her. What chance had the poor clown against this man? Yet I fancied if he were only out of the way I need not despair of winning her. Did she not love my sister, and had she not often spoken kindly to me, and praised my acting and singing? But this day I had learned the worst—that her kindness to me sprang only from a gentle and friendly feeling for the sister of the girl she had learned to love like a sister, and that she had promised to be the wife of Count von Walters. What wonder that I went to my lodgings with despair in my heart!

My little sister exerted herself to make things cheerful in our quiet sitting-room. She suspected nothing of the real cause of my downheartedness, for she, my confidant in everything else, had never been intrusted with the secret of my love for Dora; and she, the hope of drawing me out of my morose mood, prattled on about a number of unimportant matters. She was interrupted by a knock at the door, followed by the entrance of our landlady. The good soul apologized for coming in at so late an hour, but the postman had brought a letter for me just as I had left for the theatre, and as it bore a foreign post-mark, she thought it might be important. I should get it that evening. I thanked her mechanically, but a glance at the post-mark caused me to tear the letter open with eager and trembling fingers; for I had often heard my father speak of an only brother who had settled in England in early youth, and from whom vague reports came, from time to time, of a successful mercantile career. The letter was postmarked London, and the heavy black border lines told the story before the seal was broken. My uncle was dead. He had never married, and on his death-bed, remembering his only brother, he had left all his wealth to him or his children. For a moment I felt stunned and faint; and Ada, throwing her arms about my neck, begged me to tell her what had news was in my letter to make me look so strange and pale. I took her on my knee and told her we were rich, and would have no more need to act in the theatre. We would leave this miserable little town and go to Berlin.

To my surprise, Ada again put her arms about my neck, and whispered softly, "Need we leave the theatre immediately, dear brother?"

"No, child," said I, wondering what she could mean; "but tell me why you should want to stay another day, when you can leave at once and be free from this slavery?"

"Because, dear brother," she answered, hesitating and blushing, "Fraulein Dora told me I was a great deal prettier than she was, and a better dancer; and that I should have the first place in the new dance they are to put on the stage next week. Oh, I would like to have such a

Original Poetry.

Autumn.

BY THE BARD OF THE MOUNTAIN.

Now vanish the hot rays of summer. As autumn the golden appears, The western winds solemnly murmur, And blustering winter draws near.

The forest a hue of deep yellow Beneath the cool breezes assumes, The falling sun, hazy and mellow, The serene meadow faintly illumines.

October relieved by November, Frost-precipitated to Lethe may fly, And usher bleak, hoar December, Suggestive of heart's blazing bliss.

As nature puts off her green mantle And sheds her soft garment of white, She changes her aspect so gently, Thoughtful with shudders so bright.

Farwell to thy green shady bowers Sweet summer, thou season of bliss, Bright sunshine and heart-cheering flowers, Reluctant thy charms we dismiss.

Instinctively turning our vision We greet coming winter's approach, Who, though we appear to deplore, Congratulates the whole earth by his breath.

The Story-Teller.

ON THE TRAP.

I was only a clown, a painted, grinning clown, attached on a small salary to a theatre in the capital of one of the States into which Germany was divided before the genius and ambition of Bismark had effected its consolidation into the empire. My role was popular because everybody likes to laugh, and likes one who puts them in a laughing mood. My make-up was considered a marvel of perfection. My songs always took, and my gestures and grimaces never failed to elicit the most rapturous applause. It used to be said that my face must be made of India rubber, it could be twisted and distorted into such strong expressions. But I hated the life, and my success made it more and more distasteful.

One night I went home completely worn out in body and mind. My little sister Ada, fifteen years old, and light and graceful as a sylph, who was engaged as a danseuse at the same theatre, also seemed dispirited and worn. The play had been running forty nights, and the whole company was heartily sick of it. But it was not this alone which exerted a depressing influence on my spirits that evening. For many weeks I had been losing my heart to Fraulein Dora, the principal danseuse of the theatre, who was no less lovely in mind and heart than in her person. She was the most beautiful woman I had ever seen, tall, well formed, graceful, with a step like a fairy queen, large, thoughtful, woman eyes; and a sweet, winning smile. My first drew me to her was her kindness to my sister, whom she took every opportunity to befriend and assist in her profession. This was the more surprising, because Ada promised to become a dangerous rival; and in the theatrical profession, jealousy is the rule, and generosity the exception. So I learned to like Dora, and to feel that she was a woman who would do me good. All the gentry of the place fell in love with her, and raved about her beauty and her dancing, in a way that nearly drove me wild with jealousy. I was in love in the old-fashioned way we read of in novels—I am not ashamed to confess it—eager to kiss the ground on which she trod, and would not believe that any one else could love and worship her with the same devotion. I must not omit to say that Dora, in the midst of all this adulation, displayed the most discreet and modest behaviour. She was always attended to and from the theatre by her mother, and always returned the rich presents which were showered upon her.

Among all who paid court to Dora, I feared only one, the young rich, handsome, and accomplished Count Ernest von Walters, who pressed his suit with me, and tried to seduce her. What chance had the poor clown against this man? Yet I fancied if he were only out of the way I need not despair of winning her. Did she not love my sister, and had she not often spoken kindly to me, and praised my acting and singing? But this day I had learned the worst—that her kindness to me sprang only from a gentle and friendly feeling for the sister of the girl she had learned to love like a sister, and that she had promised to be the wife of Count von Walters. What wonder that I went to my lodgings with despair in my heart!

My little sister exerted herself to make things cheerful in our quiet sitting-room. She suspected nothing of the real cause of my downheartedness, for she, my confidant in everything else, had never been intrusted with the secret of my love for Dora; and she, the hope of drawing me out of my morose mood, prattled on about a number of unimportant matters. She was interrupted by a knock at the door, followed by the entrance of our landlady. The good soul apologized for coming in at so late an hour, but the postman had brought a letter for me just as I had left for the theatre, and as it bore a foreign post-mark, she thought it might be important. I should get it that evening. I thanked her mechanically, but a glance at the post-mark caused me to tear the letter open with eager and trembling fingers; for I had often heard my father speak of an only brother who had settled in England in early youth, and from whom vague reports came, from time to time, of a successful mercantile career. The letter was postmarked London, and the heavy black border lines told the story before the seal was broken. My uncle was dead. He had never married, and on his death-bed, remembering his only brother, he had left all his wealth to him or his children. For a moment I felt stunned and faint; and Ada, throwing her arms about my neck, begged me to tell her what had news was in my letter to make me look so strange and pale. I took her on my knee and told her we were rich, and would have no more need to act in the theatre. We would leave this miserable little town and go to Berlin.

To my surprise, Ada again put her arms about my neck, and whispered softly, "Need we leave the theatre immediately, dear brother?"

"No, child," said I, wondering what she could mean; "but tell me why you should want to stay another day, when you can leave at once and be free from this slavery?"

"Because, dear brother," she answered, hesitating and blushing, "Fraulein Dora told me I was a great deal prettier than she was, and a better dancer; and that I should have the first place in the new dance they are to put on the stage next week. Oh, I would like to have such a

Original Poetry.

Autumn.

BY THE BARD OF THE MOUNTAIN.

Now vanish the hot rays of summer. As autumn the golden appears, The western winds solemnly murmur, And blustering winter draws near.

The forest a hue of deep yellow Beneath the cool breezes assumes, The falling sun, hazy and mellow, The serene meadow faintly illumines.

October relieved by November, Frost-precipitated to Lethe may fly, And usher bleak, hoar December, Suggestive of heart's blazing bliss.

As nature puts off her green mantle And sheds her soft garment of white, She changes her aspect so gently, Thoughtful with shudders so bright.

Farwell to thy green shady bowers Sweet summer, thou season of bliss, Bright sunshine and heart-cheering flowers, Reluctant thy charms we dismiss.

Instinctively turning our vision We greet coming winter's approach, Who, though we appear to deplore, Congratulates the whole earth by his breath.

The Story-Teller.

ON THE TRAP.

I was only a clown, a painted, grinning clown, attached on a small salary to a theatre in the capital of one of the States into which Germany was divided before the genius and ambition of Bismark had effected its consolidation into the empire. My role was popular because everybody likes to laugh, and likes one who puts them in a laughing mood. My make-up was considered a marvel of perfection. My songs always took, and my gestures and grimaces never failed to elicit the most rapturous applause. It used to be said that my face must be made of India rubber, it could be twisted and distorted into such strong expressions. But I hated the life, and my success made it more and more distasteful.

One night I went home completely worn out in body and mind. My little sister Ada, fifteen years old, and light and graceful as a sylph, who was engaged as a danseuse at the same theatre, also seemed dispirited and worn. The play had been running forty nights, and the whole company was heartily sick of it. But it was not this alone which exerted a depressing influence on my spirits that evening. For many weeks I had been losing my heart to Fraulein Dora, the principal danseuse of the theatre, who was no less lovely in mind and heart than in her person. She was the most beautiful woman I had ever seen, tall, well formed, graceful, with a step like a fairy queen, large, thoughtful, woman eyes; and a sweet, winning smile. My first drew me to her was her kindness to my sister, whom she took every opportunity to befriend and assist in her profession. This was the more surprising, because Ada promised to become a dangerous rival; and in the theatrical profession, jealousy is the rule, and generosity the exception. So I learned to like Dora, and to feel that she was a woman who would do me good. All the gentry of the place fell in love with her, and raved about her beauty and her dancing, in a way that nearly drove me wild with jealousy. I was in love in the old-fashioned way we read of in novels—I am not ashamed to confess it—eager to kiss the ground on which she trod, and would not believe that any one else could love and worship her with the same devotion. I must not omit to say that Dora, in the midst of all this adulation, displayed the most discreet and modest behaviour. She was always attended to and from the theatre by her mother, and always returned the rich presents which were showered upon her.

Among all who paid court to Dora, I feared