These local institutes were held, the people attended a generous hospitality to the teachers in attendance, and codiaity entertained them during the sessions. As I have carefully noted the progress made in teach-ing within the part lew years, I have been convinced that the methods of teaching in our primary schools have been less improved than those employed in any other grade of schools. Here there seems to be comparatively little intelligent adaptation of means to ende; many teachers following the "treat-mill" style, in the footsept of their predecessors without asking themselves why or wherefore. I wait of these facts, "primary instruction" has re-ceived special attention in our county and local institutes. I was chered to notice, in any visits to the schools lest winter, a marked improvement in this department of teaching. In many of the primary schools, and primary classes of ungraviou schools, the pupls, instead of being required to tread the customary spisor to the surely required to tread the customary spisor to the surely required to tread the customary spisor to the surely prediced cours, were receiving instruction adapted to the growth and de-velopment of their mould facilities, in systematic oral in-struction and object lessons.
