Monroe, C. also seem that the shortage elsewhere cannot be so great as has been feared. It has also been pointed out that the list of creditors now given is different from the amount of indebt edness contained in Mr. Lloyd's statement made when he first closed. That statement included only the creditors of the Altoona office, because it then appeared that the other offices would be able to take care of themselves. The list now filed includes both the individual creditors and the creditors of the different partnership firms, because the bank rupt law demands that all who have provable claims against a debtor shall be included in the list of creditors. The claims of Mr. Lloyd's creditors in Tyrone, Latrobe, &c., are provable claims, for they may be proved against his individual estate in case he should be eventually forced into bankruptcy.
