THE Harrisburg Telegraph has been dressed in a handsome new suit, its size lessened, a nice white paper substituted for the dirty-looking article heretofore used, and otherwise improved in appearance. A marked improvement is also noticeable in its news and local columns, and upon the whole the paper is now a credit to the State Capital. We are pleased to notice these things in our old friend, the Telegraph, and we hope it will continue to receive a liberal patronage from the Republicans throughout the State.

EDITOR JOURNAL.—Considering the disordere condition of communication throughout the country, it is a little uncertain when this will reaching the condition of communication throughout the country, it is a little uncertain when this will reach the condition of t d old or throw it aside, just as you see fit.

A little more than a week ago I started from the quiet precincts of Huntingdon county, for a little trip through Western Pennsylvania and Ohio, stopping for a couple of days at the town of Indiana, where is located the newest of Pennsylvania's State Normal Schools. This institution has a very fine building constructed with all the modera conveniences, an intelligent and liberal Board of Trustees and an accomplished corps of instructors and is apparently doing good service in preparing young men and women to take charge of "the people's colleges," of the western portion of our State.

Unless our older institutions of this character are diligent in adopting all improvements in the art of teaching and in eliminating all which at present weakens and impairs their influence, they will have the mortification of seeing their patron-age gradually dwindling away and their noticet honors worn by others. Indiana, the county seat honors worn by others. Indiana, the county seasof Indiana county, is a neat little town of about 2500 people, with a very fine court house, good church edifices, substantial business blocks, neat and tasteful and in some cases elegant private residences, and altogether has an air of enterprise, refinement and culture pleasing to observe speaking volumes for its citizens.

speaking volumes for its citizens.

From Indiana our route lay through Pittsburg, which seemed smokier, dirtier and busier than ever. As we took passage on the Pan Handle train on the morning of the 19th and watched the busy on the morning of the 19th and watched the cusy throng of travel pouring in and out of the Union Depot, and trains arriving and departing with the regularity of clock-work, we little thought that four days later the hill above the depot and the streets around it, would be filled with a hooting, yelling, fearned multifuld best on the destruction of the renzied multitude bent on the destruction property of the great corporation in whose employ many of them had prospered for years, and thirst-ing for the blood of those who had been sent to ing for the blood of those who had been sent to maintain law and protect property. Butsuch are the terrible facts which the last few days have revealed. Passing on to Newark, 30 miles east of Columbus, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the road on which the present strike began, an opportunity has been offered of watching its progress and development from a point near its source. In Newark, the Baltimore and Ohio men struck on the 20th and from that time have allowed no one to take out any freight cars. Several attempts to take out any freight cars. Several attempts were made on that day and the following to put new men on the engines, and quite a number of new men on the engines, and quite a numb volunteers came forward and offered their ser but in every instance they were prevented from moving trains by the strikers, who although not moving trains by the strikers, who atthough not riotous or violent were firm and determined, and if their orders were not obeyed, soon collected sufficient numbers to enforce obedience and prevent trains from leaving. Passenger trains were allowed to proceed as usual, although many attempts were made to induce train hands to desert so that were John Shaw, Republican, by a majorithe trains could not proceed. Soldiers were ordered out, and at present there are about 500 militia

The following resolution was endorsed by the Republican County Convention, held August 24th, 1875:

That hereafter the apportionment of delegates to the Republican pominating convention in Hunt-

Valley think if in the midst of wheat harvest his men would come to him some morning and say: Mr. A. we have no objection to harvest your wheat, but we want more wages; we want $1.75 a day, and what is more, if we don't get it, we won't cut your crop nor allow any person else to do it. You may go and come as you please, but you shan't interfere with these wheat fields, or put any one to work er we will shoot them." What do yea think the farmer would do? Well, I think he would call in the services of the Sheriff and a nosse, and have in the services of the Sheriff and a posse, and have these men arrested and punished and would go on with his harvesting with all the help he could procure and all the people in the neighborhood would appland the farmer's course. This is a fair parallel, the only difference being found in the numbers employed, and the magnitude of the interests involved. Many of the roads are not paying their owners, i. e., the stockholders. When proprietors of private enterprises find themselves in this position, they suspend operations. But with railroads it is different. They must go on in some way, for their charters impose upon them a perpetual existence, and the only course open to them is to cut down expenses, just as all the great lines in the country have been doing. The question which was presented to them was: Shall we pay each of our employees less, or shall we discharge a large number outright, since decrease expenses we must. Some of the large companies including the B. & O., and Pennsylvania adopted the former alternative, and then came discontent and finally the in the services of the Sheriff and a posse, and have

We feel that the state of the labor market is deplorable, and carneatly desire that the condition of the working men of the country might be improved; but while zealeusly striving towards this end, we may question whether the stoppage of all transportation, the derangement of what little bustransportation, the derangement of what it is iness there is, and the destruction of millions of

Let us then, hope that in these trying times, none through mistaken sympathy, will give strength to those forces which can only disintegrate and destroy, but rather, de what can be done to support the properly constituted authorities, remembering that there is no real variance between capital and labor, that their interests are really capital and labor, that their interests are really identical and that only by means of the hearty and complete union and co-operation of the two can real prosperity come to any community or nation.

The strikes in Baltimore and Pitsburgh set these classes into a ferment. The unemployed wanted work, the communists wanted an opportunity to "strike for the rights of man," and the ruffians and tramps wanted disorder that they might pillage with impunity. The excitement culminated in a with impunity. The excitement culminated in a monster meeting at Tomkin's square, Wednesday night, under the direction of behawb, Thompson and Swinton, the three leaders of the New York communists. When the meeting was called the communists. When the meeting was called the city was in a state of alarm. It was feared that the fanatical leaders would inflame the multitude sure to be there, and that the meeting would culminate in a riot, which would end no one could tell when or where. The authorities acted promptly and with discretion. The National Guard was noticed under arms and a very large number of ordered under arms, and a very large number of ordered under arms, and a very large number of special police were sworn in. They gave the communists permission to hold their meeting, but gave them to understat. that the place would be surrounded by police, and at the first intimation of disorder the military would be brought into requisition, and that there would be no half way work about it. The leaders saw that the authorities meant business and they instructed their followers to keep the peace, which fortunately for themselves they did. The meeting was a firste, and with the firste anded the hopes of the roughs of New York, to inaugurate a riot here. of New York, to inaugurate a riot here.

The effect upon business has been terrible. Immense masses of freights lie in the depots, there is no regularity in mails, and the influx of strangers into the city has almost ceased. Trade is almost as entirely at a stand-still, as it is in Pittsburgh. But it can't last. Men may stand and swing club and yell, a few days, but they have got to eat, and food was never got by swinging clubs and yelling. The Pennsylvania road is now open, and the others will be in a day or two; and the regular

As immigration and travel have been chiefly westward for many years, some of the earliest settled portions of our country have become the least known to us. The events of the war caused a radical change of affairs. The slaves were set free, leaving the owners to their own resources. Many had never learned to labor and knew in their own personal experience but little of toil and hence found themselves unable to properly cultivate and care for their large estates, the panic with its depreciation in values followed, and this and various other causes may account for the quantity of land now thrown upon the market. That many northern and western men are taking advantage of the opportunities now offered for settling is not at all surprising for now we find, here a country level, or moderately undulating, rich, slaves were set free, leaving the owners to their a country level, or moderately undulating, rich, and beautiful in rural scenery, a soil, alluvial in character and formation, free from stones and though some of it still thin and rather poor yet though some of it still thin and rather poor yet all easily cultivated and improved, generous in response to the toil and expenditures of the husbandman and admirably adapted to the production of all the cereals, grasses, fruits, vegetables and flowers of the temperate zone. The climate is equable, plessant and healthful, being fanned at all times of day and night by breezes from the large bodies of salt water by which it is nearly surrounded. This favored section is subject neither to the extreme heat of the south nor to the long, cold, rigorous winters of the north, that it is cold, rigorous winters of the north, that it is healthful, is amply attested by the large frames, fresh color and apparent vigor of the inhabitants. The grand network of railroads which reaches almost every town and village, together with the steamboats and other vessels that ply along the The Great Strike—The Commune Leaders—The shores and penetrate the interior by means of navigable streams afford unsurpassed facilities for shipping and travel. Both Delaware and Maryland have excellent systems of common schools offering instructions free to all children and youth of the proper age for from 6 to 10 months a year. Private instructions of learning of a higher grade are numerous and generally well sustained. The more depressing. It is a thousand pities that the madmen could not let the roads operate in peace till the enormous crop that covers the entire West, was gotten to market, and the money for it distributed in the hands of the farmers. It is a thousand pities that men haven't sense enough to know that force never did add a cent to a man's wages, and that labor is something that regulates itself, and which physical force can neither alter or amend. There was, all the week, a feverish feeling of apprehension. There are in the city fifty thousand honest men out of employment, fifty thousand more whe wouldn't do a stroke of work to sark their livers, so long as anything can. ores and penetrate the interior by means of navpeaches, pears, apples, strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, grapes, melons, &c., the location—its nearness to the great cities of Wilmington, Phila-delphia, New York, Boston, Baltimore, &c., the wonderful means of communication, and transpor-ation and travel by land and water and the excellenoy of our common roads, we regard this Penin-sula as one of the most inviting spots on the con-tinent to the agriculturist and horticulturist and as an abode of retirement to the man of wealth. as an abode of retirement to the man of weath. A number of northern men made sad shipwrecks here in the past and I would sound the note of warning to those who come with the intention of locating. The moderate price at which farms are offered and the beauty of the country are very tempting to purchase largely and plunge heavily into debt. This policy does, sometimes, succeed but the danger of failing is great and the better and safer way for every one, is to buy within his means, remembering that a small farm properly entitivated and improved is far mere remunerative than a large one without the means to give it such culturs. Wheat harvest is over and the crop has been good, corn has been largely planted, and promises very well. Trucking is carried on to a large extent in some parts of the State. A Mr. Reese, near Millford, has 8 acres in melons and expects to ship 30 tons. But few peaches have as yet been shipped from this State, but work will soon commence in earpest. Theorop here is large, the reports from other parts of the peach regions are somewhat conflicting, yet it may, I think, safely be presumed that the actual yield will be largely in excess of the general estimate. Prices are avented to be low and great efforts are being made A number of northern men made sad shipwreck ly be presumed that the actual yield will be largely in excess of the general estimate. Prices are expected to be low and great efforts are being made to properly distribute and utilize the crop. This Peninsula is at last favored with a sea-side summer resort. The several railroad lines forming the route via. Salisbury, Md., have erected a commodious hotel, capable of entertaining 400 guests at Ocean City, and excursions from Wilmington and intermediate points along the line of the Delaware division of P. W. & R. railroad are now quite frequent. It is claimed that the place is unequaled for surf bathing and yachting on the Atlantic coast. Camp meetings and Sunday School Conventions will soon commence and a lively time is anticipated. The weather so far has been delightful. Sometimes quite warm for a few consecutive days, followed by showers, which were in turn followed by cool breezes. The nights are, in general, cool and pleasant.

Should the season however prove to be wet, the second bottom land is more desirable on account of it not being so liable to become inundated, as is first bottom land. The upland does not possess as good soil as either of the other two classes of land, on account of the rock being near the surface, consequently the soil is not se deep, and more liable to be affected by dry weather. The soil of first bottom land is mostly of a blackish color, and from one to four feet deep, that of second bottom is also of a blackish color with more of a variation of an ash color, averaging about the same in depth. Along the foot of the bluffs the soil is extreme'y black, occasioned by the sediments of the sides of the bluffs accumula-ting.
