For two months we have been making an effort to effect the settlement of the accounts standing on the books of the late firm of J. R. Durborrow & Co., but up to this time but a very small number of those to whom we have sent bills have responded. These accounts must be settled. From those who are unable to pay the cash we are willing to take their notes, for a limited time. On the first of August we had intended placing our books in the hands of an officer for collection, but we will extend the time to the first of September, at which date all unsettled accounts will be collected by due process of law. If you would save costs and annoyance, give this notice your attention. We are averse to this mode of collection, but when no attention is paid to our bills and appeals for payment, there is no other plan left for us to pursue. termine the political destinics of the State and nation.

Nor within twenty-five years has so much depended upon a State election in Pennsylvania as upon the coming one.

Ir is necessary that the Republicans elect Judge Sterrett in order to maintain their majority upon the Supreme Bench.

THERE are two State tickets in the field in Texas, Democratic and National. The Republicans will not make nominations and it is probable that the National ticket will be elected.

THE Nationals complain of the scarcity of labor. Do they want it to be plentier? If workingmen all had employment they might become capitalists, and no capitalist can be a National.

MR. TILDEN is frequently seen walking alone and talking to himself. At such times he is only conferring with the fellow who concocted the Oregon scheme. How mad he must be at its author about its this matter at once. DENNIS KEARNEY, the California agitator and communist, who came east to champion the cause of the workingmen, has shown, by his vulgarity and blasphemy, that he is a foul mouthed blackguard, and the American people should give him to understand that an Irish outlaw is not the kind of an educator they take kindly to. THE Speer-North wing of the Democraey, by the purchase of the Nationalist, have now two organs, whilst the straightout Democrats and Greenbackers are left "out in the cold." With two organs they think they can deliver the goods as agreed upon. J. R. Durborrow has been hired to "assume the pressure" of organ No. 2.

In the fifth Congressional district of Louisians there is a Republican majority of about ten thousand. The Democrats of about ten thousand. The Democrats of about ten thousand. The Democrats of about ten thousand acts of lawcan carry it only by committing acts of lawlessness, intimidation and violence towards the colored people, and these they do with perfect immunity from punishment. The so-called carpet bag governments were not half as bad as the reign of terror now existing in the South.

Over to the eastward was another dark cloud, and both seemed to be approaching Wallingford very slowly. Zigzag lightning played among the dark folds of these clouds, and the scene was strange enough to attract the attention of a class little given to detecting anything grand or unusual in the manner in which storms come. The wind seemed to be blowing from the southeast, and it was thought that neither cloud would burst over the village. Still they came nearer, and as they approached they assumed the form of upright columns of dense material, both moving toward a point in the heavens directly over the Wallingford plains. About an hour after these slowly moving columns were first observed, the groups of people watching were first observed, the groups of people watching them saw their speed increase and the flashes of lightning become more intense in their brightness. There was a death-like stillness in the air, and every living thing seemed to scent the impending calamity. A few drops of rain came pattering down.

Meanwhile the snow white column of cloud, fianked by columns of awful blackness, swept down upon the place with terrible swiftness. Men started to run for their houses to warn their wives and children, but they had hardly started before the storm, with its full fury, was upon them and

He had gone to his home, and, while his wife was preparing supper, sat with his youngest child on his knee, tossing it up and down and singing to it, his little daughter singing with him and playing with the baby. He heard the rain drops patter against the window panes and went to close the windows up stairs, kissing his baby boy and handing it to his wife. As he was lowering a window the tornado struck As he was lowering a window the tornado struck the house, and in an instant made a complete wreck of it. He caught hold of a ladder in the room and was carried with it some 200 feet into an adjoining lot, where he landed on his feet unhurt, save from slight bruises on his person, caus nurt, save from sight oruses on his person, caused by flying shingles and timbers. He hurried back to his house and there found his wife lying dead and scalped, with the infant clasped to her breast, also dead, something having struck the little one on the left temple which probably killed it instantly. An oval place was cut in the head at the temple as clean as though done with a action temple as clean as though done with an instrument. His little daughter lay moaning in the ruins, and when he reached her he found the little one badly cut and bruised, the right arm broken in three places, and her shoulder blade broken. Her jaw was also broken and her tongue badly cut, so that she could not utter the "Papa bady cut, so that she could not utter the "rapa," which she vainly tried to do. She lived until, at about midnight, death kindly came to her relief, and it was all the relief she could have. Then the strong man gave way and wept like a boy on finding himself deprived of all in the world that habid death.

When the sun rose it shone upor

The streets devasted by the tornado were Colony The streets devasted by the tornado were Colony, Main, Elm and High streets, and Wallace row, sometimes called Christian street. Nearly all the houses on the plains were mortgaged to Meriden banks which will consequently be heavy losers, as insurance policies do not cover any loses by wind. The number of buildings destroyed or badly shattered is about fifty-five. The aggregate damage to property is estimated at from $200,000 to $256,000. The Catholic cemetery was devastated by the winds, and a number of monuments were ruined, including the fine brown stone monuments.

Most of these monuments are ruined beyond repair. One of the largest trees on Colony street had its tough branches stripped of twigs, and the bare limbs pointed as though they would signify the direction in which the furious storm had gone. Mr. Shepard, the artist, who lived upon the hill, had one side of his house carried away. A glass globe filled with water, and containing a fish commonly known as a "bull head," was left uninjured, although it was attached to the same side of the house from which the wall was torn assuder. Louis Guyot's house on Ladies' Lace Morocco Shoes, $1.25, 1.50, 1.75 and 2.00. wall was torn as under. Louis Guyot's house on the plains was twisted all out of shape, and the walls stand after the manner of the leaning tower Inside, the tornado stripped the plaster and al the contents of the room bare, and utterly demol ished everything except a single picture of Cardi-nal M'Closkey, which was kept from being carried away because of the three laths which remained and into which the nail holding the picture was fastened. A curious sight to-day is a cow without fastened. A curious sight to-day is a cow without any horns, they having been knocked from the animal by some missile hurled by the wind. There are persons who confidently assert that the wind was strong enough to blow off the horns. Thousands of persons were on the scene of disaster to-day and a curious fact relative to the morbid curiosity of women was shown by the fact that they, with one accord, asked for the dead house and the privilege of looking at the bodies imme diately on their arrival on the plains. The number of the dead is 27.

and children, but they had hardly started before the storm, with its full fury, was upon them and they were paralized with terror. The storm seem-ed to descend just upon the little lake that lies to the northward of the depot. In an instant the lake became a seething whirlpool. Those who were watching it say that they could see its yellow bottom where the waters had been whirled into the air in a white foam. Drawn up by the whirl-wind, the waters overflowed with a grand sweep the land to the eastward of the lake. Whirling with awful velocity and moving along the earth with terrific force this irresistible mass came in contact with a dwelling and flattened it. There was no struggle with the objects that were in its pathway; they were crushed as though the whirlwind had presented an unyielding front of solid material. Black with the ruins of shattered buildings the whirlwind went sweeping up Colony street, uprooting trees and demolishing houses. The buildings were leveled to the ground as though a mountain rock had fallen upon them. The Cathelic church was a flat heap of boards and splintered timbers: From this point the course of the whirlwind was up and over the hill toward the centre of the town, but a little to the northward.
