His companions had flown with their booty; help might have arrived at any moment. With a great effort he wrenched himself from the clutch of his victim, and let go his throat and sped away. It was not too soon. Assistance arrived, now that it was too late, but Mr. Halifont did not live to tell the story. He was mortally wounded. His young wife watched by his bedside until he breathed his last, then dropped beside it senseless.</li> <li>For weeks she raved in wild delirium of the murderous hand, of the great muscular arm with the scar upon it, and called upon them all to save her husband's life; but she was young, and had a fine constitution. After a while her health returned, and, at last, her mind regained its equipose.</li> <li>She removed from the city and took up her abode in a lonely country place, with a favorite sister for her companion. She had resolved, as all widows who have loved their husbands do at first, to remain a widow forever. And indeed, though many men would gladly have tempted one so young, beautiful, and wealthy to change her mind on this point, she seemed to care less for any one of them than for the kitten which purred upon her knee, or the black-and-tan terrier which ran by her side along the garden paths. She was nineteen when her husband was murdered; at thirt to the memory.</li> </ul>	for any other. Suddenly Colonel Humphries felt him- self grasped by a hand that, small as it was, had the fierce clutch of a tiger's claw. The fingers closed over that red mark—a white face came close to his. "You are my husband's murderer!" hissed a voice in his ear. Then the two stood staring at each oth- er. He made no denial. He only looked down at the red mark upon his arm, and cursed it aloud. "How dared you make love to me?" she gasped. "You—" "Because I loved you," he said. "Wo- man if I had not fallen in love with you that night, I would have killed you also. It was risking my life to save you, with your screams calling men to hunt me down—" "O, if you had but killed me then !" she maned. "Well I am at your mercy now," he said. She answered : "You can kill! I wish you would. I pray do it. You killed my husband. The murderer of my husband must be brought to justice, and I—yesterday, nay, an hour ago—I loved you ! O, God, pity me! I have loved this man, the thief who came in the night to rob my husband, and who murdered him." She remembered saying this. Afterwards a strange drowsiness overcame her. LOVELY woman, if thou wouldst always be lovely, listen to the counsel of the Comtesse de Bassanville in the Almanach du Saviour-Vire. "When you are past tweaty-five," she says, "never let more than five or six hours pass without closing your eyes for a short time—say ten minutes; not necessarily to sleep, but to repose the muscles of the eye." Every movement and play of the face necessarily tends to fatigue these muscles, whether it be a smile or the expression of surprise or of fixed action. The closing of the eye- lids at intervals is, therefore, recommended as a "beauty rest." The muscles, reposed, lose their tendency to that nervous contraction which translates itself into wrinkles.
