To the House of Representatives—I return to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill entitled "An act making appropriations to pay fees of United States marshals and their general deputies," with the following objections to its becoming a law: The bill appropriates the sum of $600,000 for the payment, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, of United States marshals and their general deputies. The offices thus provided for are essential to the faithful execution of the laws. They were created, and their powers and duties defined by Congress at its first session after the adoption of the Constitufirst session after the adoption of the Constitu-tion, in the Judiciary act which was approved September 24, 1789. Their general duties, as defined in the act which originally established them, were substantially the same as those pre-scribed in the statutes in force. The principal provision on the subject in the revised statutes of the courts, and the judicial system of the country would be fatally defective. The criminal jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is very extensive. The crimes committed within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States are all cognizable only in the courts of the United States. Crimes against public justice, crimes against the operations of the government, such as forgery, or counterfeiting the money or securities of the United States; crimes against the postal laws, offenses against the elective franchise, against the civil rights of citizens, against the existence of the government; crimes against the internal revenue laws, the custom laws, the neutrality laws; crimes against laws for the protection of Indians and of the public lands—all of these crimes, and many others, can be punished.

States.

In the District of Columbia all of the processes of the courts are executed by the officers in question. In short, the execution of the criminal laws of the United States, the service of all civil process in cases in which the United States is a party, and the execution of the revenue laws, the neutrality laws and many other laws of large importance, depend on the maintenance of the marshals and their deputies. They are, in effect, the only police of the United States Government. Officers with corresponding powers and duties are found to the United States of the right to execute its laws; a denial of all authority which requires the laws; a denial of all authority which requires the use of civil force. The law entitles these officers to be paid. The funds needed for the purpose have been collected from the people, and are now in the treasury.

No objection is, therefore, made to that part of the bill before me which appropriates money for the support of marshals and deputy marshals of the United States. The bill contains, however, other provisions which are identical in tenor and effect with the second section of the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for certain judicial."

referred to are as follows:

Section 2, "That the sums appropriated in this act for the persons and public service embraced in its provisions are in full for such persons and public service for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1880, and no department or officer of the government shall, during said fiscal year, make any contract or incur any liability for the future payment of money under any of the provisions of title twenty-six mentioned in section one of this act, until an appropriation sufficient to meet such contract, or pay such liability, shall have first been made by law."

year. The object, manifestly, is to place before necessary functions of the public service to be crippled or suspended for the want of the appropriation, required to keep them in operation, or to approve legislation which, in official communications to Communication to Commun tions to Congress he has declared would be a vio-lation of his constitutional duty. Thus in this bill the principal is clearly embodied that, by virtue of the provision of the constitution which requires that "all bills for raising revenue shall requires that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives," that body has the right to withhold appropriations for the support of the government unless the Executive consents to approve any legislation which may be attach d to appropriation bills. I respectfully refer to the communications on this subject which I have sent to Congress during its present session for a statement of the grounds of my conclusions, and desire here merely to repeat that, in my judgment, to establish the principle of this bill is to make a radical, dangerous and unconstitutional change in the character of our institutions.

Executive Mansion, June 30, 1879.

A MESSAGE TO THE SENATE After the reading of the message in the House and the failure of the passage of the bill over the veto, the President at 3:20 P. M. sent the following to the Senate:

To the Senate and House of Representatives.—
The bill making appropriations for the payment of United States marshals and their general deputies which I have this day returned to the House of Representatives (in which it originated) with my objections, having on its reconsideration by that body failed to become a law, I respectfully call your attention to the immediate necessity of making some adequate provision for the due and efficient execution by marshals and deputy marshals of the United States for the constant and important duties enjoined upout them by existing laws. All appropriations to provide for the performance of their indispensable duties expire to-day under the laws prohibiting public officers from involving the government in any contract or liabilities beyond the actual appropriations. It is apparent that the means at the disposal of the executive department, for executing laws through the regular ministerial officers, will after to-day be left inadequate. The suspension of the necessary functions in the ordinary administration of the first duties of the government for the shortest period is inconsistent with the public interest, and at any moment may government for the shortest period is inconsistent with the public interest, and at any moment may prove inconsistent with public safety, It is impossible for me to look without grave concern on a state of things which leaves the public thus unprovided for and the public interest thus unprotected, and I earnestly urge on your attention the necessity of making immediate appropriation for the maintenance of the service of marshals for the fiscal year which commences to-morrow. (Signed) June 30, 1879.
