The Muses' Bowyer.

The Mirror of Life.
Let us look in the glass for a moment,
Let us brush off the mist from the face—
The mirror of life that is broken,
When Death in our ear knells the token
To crumble in space.
We must fall whether praying or plaining,
Who are feasting or musing the day,
Brush the mist from the mirror, then trembling;
The grave is no place for dissembling—
There vanity lies low.
The eyes, as they gaze to earth's glory,
Peer into that mirror of pain,
Where the stain of our years lies heavy,
Bent over by grim shadowy gray,
Recording each stain.
Not a blot nor a blemish escapes them,
The sins of the soul and the crown,
The crimes when we pondered or patterned,
The dark things that lips never fattered
They cry out aloud.
They are there, and no tempter can hide them;
They glow with accusing and shame,
The 'twelve years' all dead, they are living,
Mid the silence they cry for forgiving
With direct appeal.
On the wreck-plank of life there pardon
When joy is now hollow in sin?
When the heart sees no light in the sparkle,
No gleam where the shadowy ways dark
Of heaven and kin?
Then brush the world's mist from the mirror
While life in our breast is sweet,
And call on the angels to sing
Of our paths the fairest and surest,
The trace of our feet.

Select Miscellany.

GEN. GRANT IN PEKIN.
Eating Soup with Prince Kung.
THE FIRST MEETING WITH THE PRINCE REGENT OF CHINA—THE CHILD EMPEROR—A CHINESE ENTERTAINMENT WHERE SHARK'S FINS AND BIRDS' NEST SOUP WERE SERVED.
J. J. Young's Pekin Letter to New York Herald.
General Grant did not ask an audience of the Emperor. The Emperor is a child seven years of age, at his books, not in good health, and under the care of two old ladies called the empresses. When the Chinese Minister in Paris spoke to the General about audience, and his regret that the sovereign of China was not of that age which he might personally entertain the President, the General said he hoped no question of audience would be raised. He had no personal curiosity to see the Emperor, and there could be no useful object in conversing with a child. This question of seeing the Emperor is one of the sensitive points in Chinese diplomacy. The Chinese idea is that the Emperor is the Son of Heaven, the titular if not the accepted king of the world, king of kings, a sacred being, not to be seen by profane, barbarian eyes. Foreign powers have, however, fought his claim and have insisted by every means upon the Emperor standing on the same level as other sovereigns and heads of States receiving and sending Ministers and taking an active personal interest in international affairs. These arguments went so far as to induce the Emperor to receive the foreign Ministers in the palace. It made a sensation at the time.
VISIT TO PRINCE KUNG.
As soon as General Grant arrived at Pekin he was met by the Secretary of State, who brought the card of Prince Kung and said his Imperial Highness would be glad to see General Grant any time. The General named the succeeding day, at three. The General and party left the Legation at half past two, the party embracing Mr. Holcombe, the acting Minister; Colonel Grant, Lieut. Charles Belknap, G. W. Deering and A. Ludlow Case, Jr., of the Army. The party was met by a carriage and driven to the town, the day being unusually warm, the thermometer marking 101 degrees in the shade. This is a trying temperature under the best circumstances, but in Pekin there was every possible condition of discomfort in addition. When the party arrived at the residence of the Prince, a group of mandarins received the General and his party and escorted them into the inner court. Prince Kung, who was standing at the door with a group of high officers, advanced and welcomed the General, and said a few words of welcome, which were translated by Mr. Holcombe.
THE FIRST MEETING WITH THE PRINCE.
The Prince saluted General Grant in Tartar fashion, looking at him for a moment with an earnest, curious gaze, like one who had formed a high opinion of him and was anxious to see how far his ideal had been realized. The sun was beating down, and the party passed into a large, plainly furnished room, where was a table laden with Chinese food. The Prince, sitting down at the centre, gave General Grant the seat at his left, the post of honor in China. He then took up the cards and read them to the General, and the Chinese characters on red paper, and asked Mr. Holcombe for the name and station of each member of the General's suite. He spoke to Colonel Grant and asked him the meaning of the uniform he wore, the rank he showed and his age. He asked whether the Colonel was married and how many children he had. He had one child, a daughter, the Prince condescended to him, saying, "What a pity." In China, you must remember, that female children do not count in the sum of human happiness, and when the Prince expressed his regret at the existence of the General's granddaughter, he was saying the most polite thing he knew.
A CHINESE ENTERTAINMENT.
The Prince returned to his perusal of the face of the General as though it were an unlearned lesson. There was a uniformed person, a man of the dragon or lion species, who could make a great noise. What he saw was a quiet, middle aged gentleman, in evening dress, who had ridden a long way in the dust and sun, and who was looking in subdued dismay at servants who swarmed around him with dishes of food and sweetmeats, dishes of bird's nest soup, shark's fins, roast ducks, bamboo sprouts and a teapot with a hot, insipid triple made of rice, tasting like a remembrance of sherry, which was poured into small silver cups. We were none of us hungry. We had had luncheon, and we were on the programme for a special banquet in the evening. Here was a profuse and sumptuous entertainment. The dinner differed from those in Tientsin, Canton and Shanghai, in the fact that it was more quiet; there was no display or parade, no crowd of dusky servants and retainers hanging around and looking on as though at a comedy. I didn't think the Prince himself cared much about eating, because he merely dabbled over the bird's nest soup and did not touch the sharks'

President Lincoln's Parable.

"At the recent entertainment in this city, given under the auspices of the Hebrew Benevolent Association, the Rev. Dr. Scold delivered a lecture on Abraham Lincoln, in which he related quite a number of anecdotes. It was not Mr. Lincoln's nature, he said, to argue a point, but when persons would come to him with complaints he often gave them his views on the subject in a short and comprehensive manner. For instance, some gentlemen from the West had called at the White House, and had been arranging Mr. Lincoln in an excited manner about the omissions and commissions of the Government. He heard them patiently for a time, and finally said: 'Gentlemen, suppose all the property you were worth was gold, and you had put it into the hands of Blondin to carry across the Niagara river on a tight rope, would you shake the rope while he was passing over it, or keep shouting to him, 'Blondin stoop a little more; go a little faster?' No, I am sure you would not. 'You would hold your breath and see that he was safely over. Now, the Government is in the same situation, and is carrying across a stormy ocean an immense weight; untold treasures are in its hands; it is doing the best it can; don't badger it; keep silence, and it will get you safely over.'

A Child's Heroism.

At Honedale, Pa. last week Willie Bowden, aged 9 years, a slate picker on the piers of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, reached up from the scaffolding on which he stood to take the slate out from between two ponderous revolving rollers. His hand was caught by the rollers and drawn slowly in, until the little boy was raised from his feet and suspended over the canal ten feet above it. Nearly half of his arm was drawn between the rollers before the terrible situation was discovered and the machinery stopped. Before the boy could be removed, a messenger had to be despatched to the machine shop, some distance away, for machinery to take the machinery apart. This was done in ten minutes. All this time the lad hung suspended by his crushed hand and arm, the flesh being entirely torn away, exposing the bones and cords. The little fellow never uttered a cry nor shed a tear. His father, an employe on the pier, was a weeping witness to the terrible scene, and the boy kept saying, "Don't cry, father, they'll get me out all right." The lad's arm had to be amputated at the elbow.
A widow, being cautioned by her minister about flirting, said she knew it was wrong for matrons and wives to flirt, but the Bible was her authority. She said "widow's mite." She was flirting awfully at last accounts.

Snake Charmers Killed.

The renowned snake charmer, Lun-basse and son, not long since captured a large rattlesnake, and, as they thought, were mistaken, as one remained. The snake, after undergoing this operation, was put in a barrel for safe keeping, and there it remained for ten days, which so riled it that it was anxious to be avenged on any animate object, and the son in taking the barrel out, was twice bitten in the arm. He instantly dropped the reptile and applied his mouth to the wounds to extract the poison, when his lips and tongue became swollen to an immense size, and he not long after died a horrible death, leaving a large family to mourn his sad fate. In the meantime his father playfully picked up the snake, and to show the spectators how harmless it was, thrust his hand in its mouth and was bitten through the fleshy part of the hand. Shortly after his arm and hand became swollen to three times its original size and turned black, and in this condition he was retained for the past four weeks, and as he is very old little hope is entertained of his recovery.

He instantly dropped the reptile and applied his mouth to the wounds to extract the poison, when his lips and tongue became swollen to an immense size, and he not long after died a horrible death, leaving a large family to mourn his sad fate. In the meantime his father playfully picked up the snake, and to show the spectators how harmless it was, thrust his hand in its mouth and was bitten through the fleshy part of the hand. Shortly after his arm and hand became swollen to three times its original size and turned black, and in this condition he was retained for the past four weeks, and as he is very old little hope is entertained of his recovery.

MR. NASBY TAKES A LITTLE TURN THROUGH OHIO, AND REPORTS.
From the Toledo Blade.
PETTUSVILLE (which is in the State) by Ohio, Aug. 5, 1879.
I felt it my duty to head the Massed Ohio cry, "Kill over and help us!" and I don't do a little missionary work in the southern part of the State for that 'posse' unlimited money, that harbinger of good times, Gen'l. Ewing. I wish I was back in the Corners, and shud get there just ez soon ez the Central Company lets me leave this most thoroughly discouraging kentry.

It's rest up the State is anything like this seckshun, Ohio is gone up. Robin is before Ohio, and the State is driven full tilt into it.
I met with no success at all, wuz wuz not my fault, ez the couidians are agin me. I wuz never so disappointed in my life, and hope never to be so agin.
I expected to find a district kentry filled with farmers, benomin the hard times, and meecies lay in idle, with their families starvin. I expected to find a shoals, had coalis community up ferfils, had bin ground down by the money power till they wud be willin to receive any promise uz a change with joy and gladness. I expected to see factories silent and farms deserted, shops shot up, and only nashed banks and sick open. I expected to find pale men, weak eyed with hunger, and pale-faced, despairin wimen, starvin themselves that they mite keep life into their agin babies.
I had bin readin Dimeocratic papers, wuz about the people bein ground under the load wuz a distrest kentry, with the most jons antipathetic.
When I struck Pettusville it occurred to me that I must hev got into the wrong locality. I arrived in the eve, and I notice the landlord uz the hotel weighed suthin over two hundred, and his wife wuz suthin heavier, but that didn't affect me. In all strictly Dimeocratic localities, indolis grow fat, no matter who else grows lean, which generally do. I turned in and hugged the idee to my bizzam that I shoud hev easy work to do in that place.
The first thing I notice in the mornin wuz a string uz teems a mile long, more or less, waitin to unload wheat at the warehouse on the railroad. The men onto the load wuz a distrest kentry, with the most jons antipathetic.
