HUNTINGDON, PA, FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1879.

The Muses' Bower.

Welcome to Grant.

R. J. BURDETTE

When treason raised its hateful hand And aimed its blows at freedom's breast, When horrid war, with sword and brand

Our homes, our peace, our land distressed ; When true men's hearts sank low with fear, When freedom's arms were weak and spent;

When through our country far and near The air with treason's shouts was rent, We welcomed Grant.

With guns that thundered night and morn, Where Vickburg's frowning ramparts rose

With clarion calls of bugle horn; When Jackson fell beneath our blows; With dropping shots that far and near Fell from the swaying skirmish line; With bursting shell, with ringing cheer,

With roll of drum and crash of mine, We welcomed Crant.

Oft as our ranks were beaten back ;

Swept like a whirlwind on our track; Then when we needed some strong arm,

We welcomed Grant.

low, by the peace his good sword won.

By all the pains and perils braved ; n smiling plenty, glad content, In country blessed, in Union strong ;

Just as of old in field and tent, With grateful hearts, with shout and so

We welcomed Grant.

The Story-Teller.

THE LOST CHILD.

-Burlington Hawkeye

A soldier's arm, a leader's brain

On weary march, in night alarm, We called our leader by his name-

Now by the Union that he saved ; By all his deeds of valor done,

Oft as our arms enfeebled fell.

Oft as the hated rebel yell
