There are two different uses made of the word church in the Scriptures. The one is in Matthew, where Christ says to his disciples 'upon this rock I will build my church.' Here He evidently means the whole church. all those who believed, and shall believe in Him, till the end of the age, taking in its wide scope believers in every century and time, from every condition and sphere of life, who have believed on His name. Another presentation is that in which it is spoken of as a church or as churches, as in the opening churches of the world there is not a condition that is not described somewhere in that chapter, and as they were viewed as different churches so to-day, the divine idea may be that view of which Christ takes of the separate churches, those who by faith have submitted themselves to Christ, and each local church becomes a figure of what the true Church of Jesus Christ is, gathered together in this unity, it matters not how many or how few, in the name of Jesus Christ, the power that forms that mystic union be tween Him and the church which He has organized and which draws its life from Him, constituted for this end and existing by His authority, and to move in the sphere of its usefulness under His control and authority. Is it not then something yastly different from a mere ecclesiastical power that seeks to gather round it all the forces of the earth to advance itself, no matter at what cost; some-thing more than an organization that has no power of unity or of life; or one that exists and Roxbury, a box of surveyor's instruments merely for the religious training of men. If it be true that this is the organization brough which the Christ-life is to display tself, then how grand a thing the church becomes. The medium is imperfect, but, im-perfect as it is, it is the expression of the Divine life, and the church exists as an organization through which that life is to flow, and the power is to go out from it by which men are to be influenced for good, and this power is only in proportion as it radiates from the Church as the centre. You may get up among en that which you call a revival but which Jesus Christ will never own. Men get up revivals as they do political meetings, with the same kind of excitement and the same kind of results. The true idea of the growth of divine life in the world is when the church, feeling the impulse of that life which is from Christ reaches out toward men and desires them to be saved. Imperfect the church is, yet it is the medium for the manifestation of the Di ine life, and to show forth its power and indwelling. The idea I seek to unfold to day
