The Wanderer.

BY W. M. G.

Joy from his breast has flown,
Vaguely he seems to roam,
Waiting to die;
Has he no kindred dear?
None he speaks words of cheer,
Or breathe a sigh?

At! now methinks I see
Loving ones prayerfully,
Tearfully weeping;
Row'd forth with whitening hair,
Clasping their hands in prayer,
For his return.

Long has he wandered o'er
That nameless ocean's shore,
Dreary and dreary;
Where human wrecks are strewn;
Where night envelops noon;
Where Hope is dead!

Wayward, unhallo'd youth,
Damm'd by the shafts of truth,
Ladest thou to the shore,
The Wife's tempestuous flow,
Whiffs naught but bitter we,
Storm after storm!

Far from a happy home,
In the cold world's storm,
Praying to die;
Vision dim'd with tears
By thoughts of former years—
Patience!

Ye, who e'er the Word of Christ, the risen Lord,
Labor and wait!
Labor in sunny bow,
Labor in the shadow of towers,
Ere 'tis too late!

HUNTINGDON, PA.

THE WANDERER.
BY W. M. G.

Proceeding again to the front, in the Tenth Maryland regiment, Corporal C. was severely wounded, and received an honorable discharge, in March, 1864.

Upon being discharged from the Tenth Maryland, still hoping to conceal his identity, he immediately re-enlisted as a recruit with Captain Cole, the Provost Marshal at Frederick, and was sent on with a squad of twenty more, to the draft rendezvous at Leesville Square, Baltimore.

Lieutenant P. was the officer of the day when the squad reached the rendezvous. It was a part of his duty as such, to remain at the front entrance to the camp, for the purpose of scanning the recruits as they arrived, and were drawn up in line, in front of the guard quarters.

It was late in the evening. Lieutenant P. came to the Adjutant's office, his face wearing almost a deathly pall. "Adjutant," he said, "I have just discovered a deserter from my old company. He saved my life, by carrying me off the field, at the battle of Fredericksburg. I wish I had not seen him."

A short time after the Lieutenant's statement the recruits were marched to the Adjutant's office to have their names and pedigree recorded. The man rose up easily, and passed his discharge papers for former service, to the Adjutant. They were certified by a Captain of the Tenth Maryland, and endorsed by the mastering officer—"Character excellent."

Lieutenant P. extended his hand to the recruit, and said, "Corporal C., how are you?"

The unwilling deserter did not acknowledge that he recognized, by the movement of a muscle. Starting coldly at the Lieutenant, he replied, "Sir, you have the advantage. I do not recollect ever having seen you before."

"Oh! yes, you have," answered the Lieutenant. "You charged me from the field at Fredericksburg, saved my life when you were a member of my company, and deserted from the company."

"You have made a mistake, sir, you have." He stopped a moment and then continued: "It is of no use. I am Corporal C., but I am no deserter at heart. I have been in constant service," and he sank into a chair.

Tears choked the utterance of the Lieutenant, as, wavering between duty and gratitude, he said: "Corporal, I would gladly change places with you now, but you are a prisoner."

The shock unnerved the war worn and weathered Tenth Corporal, and for several weeks he was prostrated with a raging fever. A prisoner in fact, but allowed to accept the hospitality of the Lieutenant's more comfortable quarters, where his story becoming known, he received every kind of care that could be commanded. Meantime, strenuous efforts were made to remove the charge of desertion against him, which had been fixed on the company rolls, until he was finally reported to the Provost Marshal general, and dropped from the "red tape" of the War Department. He was reinstated in time, and Corporal C. was sent to the front as "a deserter." Strong papers relating the circumstances more minutely than can be done in this narrative, are on hand. He was tried and sentenced to be shot, but through the never ceasing efforts of the officer whose life he had saved, succeeded by the efforts of General Ingram, then Provost Marshal of the defense of the Potomac, he was reprieved by President Lincoln. He was subsequently killed in a charge upon the enemy's works at the "vesting," and was observed in the "Canoe" waiting in vain for the second surprise at the little Pennsylvania hamlet, near Gettysburg.
