STEWARTSVILLE, WESTMORELAND Co., Pa.) January 10, 1880. J EDITOR JOURNAL:—As quite an annount of coal finds its way to your town from the mines in this immediate vicinity, an item may be of interest. The fatal explosion in a mine of the Penn Gas Coal Company, near Irwin, December 29th, has tound wide circulation in our papers. This was but a few miles from here. As it was but 4 A. M., few miners had yet entered the fatal section. Only three were killed, but had it been a little later the loss of life might have been much greater, there being about two hundred men ani beys employed in this mine. It is not known whether the accumulated fire-damp was the result of accidental or malicious opening of the ventilating common sense manual of American poli mulation of which resulted from deranged ventila-tion, caused either by the careless or malicious leaving open of doors in said mine, by persons unknown" The miners of Irwin and vicinity held a large mass meeting on January 1st, to consider the above explosion. A series of resolu-tions were adopted, in which they indignantly denied that the miners had anything to do with leaving open the mine doors. Secretary D. R. Jones, has written a lengthy charge, stating that the neglect is traceable to the neglect of the Penn
