Ventilating Stables.

Many stables require no ventilation, as the cracks about the doors and windows, and the openings in the side walls, always admit an abundant supply of fresh air. Bat when the wainscoating, doors and windows are as tight as in a well finished dwelling house, some provision must be made for the escape of foul air and the inflow of pure air. So long as the foul air does not escape from an apartment, pure air cannot enter. In some stables flucs about a foot square extend from the ceiling to the roof. But foul air will not escape through such flues unless pure and colder air can find an entrance near the floor of the stable. Pure air will enter such holes so gradually that no draft will be produced. Then as the colder air enters, the foul air will escape through the flues. In order to ventilate any apartment by opening windows, the upper sash should be lowered, and the lower sash should be raised. By this arrangement the cool air will flow into the room beneath the sash. Let it be borne in mind that one cannot fill his sleeping apartment or stable with pure air so long as the space is occupied by foul air. Horses like to thrust their noses out of the stable, through a small window, so as to breathe the pure air. Horses will endure very cold weather without injury, provided the apartment is kept dry and full of pure air. It is vastly more injurious to a horse to breathe over and over again the foul and warm air of a close stable, than to inhale very cold air when the mercury indicates zero. Foul air will always rise into the story above the stable, provided there are openings or flucs through which it may escape into the atmosphere. A gree't many owners of fine and beautiful horses damage the health of their animals fr.r want of proper ventilation. When the coat and skin of a horse are dry, there is no danger that the animal will take cold by inhaling very cold air. But when he is warm and sweaty, the groom cannot be too careful of horses until the hair and skin is quite dry .- S. E. T.

Garden Herbs.

Every well kept garden should have a due proportion of garden herbs, but with the exception of some course fellows which know how to take care of themselves, such as catnip and chamomile, there are seldom any to be found. Those popular and useful, sage, thyme and parsley, are seldom grown except by those who make specialties of them for the market.

Of parsley we have frequently given hints. In substance we stated that it must be sown very early and on cool, rich ground ; and that if the seeds did not appear for a month, still one should have patience, for it is one of those deliberate sort of fellows which often take a long

Christ Looked Upon Them.

Very early in Christ's ministry we have a beautiful example of the winning tenderness of his gaze. Andrew, having himself, under the Baptist's guidance, beheld the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, has brought to Jesus his own brother Simon. That was an eventual meeting. For the first time that ardent impetuous, but devoted follower of Christ. stands face to face with his Lord and future Master. How remarkable is St. John's account of the interview. 'When Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art the son of Jona; thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, a stone," (Jno. i. 42). That must have been such a look JAUND as Peter could never have forgotten. It acted, doubtless, as a life long-nay, an eternal spell over his strong but sensitive nature. In that one glance Jesus read at once in the fisherman's frank, self reliant, generous features of all his weakness, and yet all his noble capabilities. Peter felt that he was thoroughly understood, and yielded himself without doubt or delay to his all conquering love and gentle sway. Very similar, though shaded by sadness, must have been the look directed by the "Good Master" to the young ruler. Filled with lively concern about his soul's wel fare, he had come running in eager haste and in broad daylight to Jesus, and put to him the question of questions : "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life ?" Price, $1,00. Sold by all Druggists. With kind severity the wise Physician has probed his heart with the sharp lancet of the law, and only elicited the candid but self deceiving answer, "All these have I observed from my youth." Before applying to him the final test, we read that "Jesus, beholding him, loved him " There was so much in the young man's character that was amiable, pure, and of good report, that the Saviour, with all his sympathy for the true and right, could not but re- SEGARS, gard him with the tenderest interest. He saw him, indeed, as an immortal being ruined by the fall; but, after all, a beau tiful ruin. And, yearning to raise him to a higher and truer life, he said unto him. One thing thou lackest ; go thy way, seil whatspever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, take up the cross, and follow me." We know the mournful sequel; and as he went away sorrowful, we can well imagine the eyes of Jesus following him with deeper sadness, as he looked round about, and said unto his disciples, "How iste the kingdom of God !" One more example of the same kind let us recall before we pass on. It is given by St. Mark, in another of those lite-like touches which add so much to the completeness of his picture of the cure of the afflicted woman. With tottering steps, and shrinking from public goze, she has No. 415 Penn St. Huntingdon, Pa mingled in the crowd that followed the Nov.S-ly Saviour At length, after one last painful effort, she has crept up close behind him. and touched his garment. In regard to sage, many have it a year or so, when it disappears. To have it continuously, it is best to treat it every second year as we would box-edgings, that is, it should be taken up, split apart, and set in the ground much deeper than it was the year before. Roots then come out from the vigorous young wood, and the plants seem better adapted to stand extremes of heat and cold than when the branches are exposed on long stalks. Sage is not so liable to get killed out in the winter when it is cut back hard in the fall as when it is left untouched. Many cut back some of it for drying. Indeed, dried sage is the form in which it is chiefly used. When this is done regularly the plants do not need replanting often.

Thyme usually manages to live through in this part of the worll, though nothing be done to it; but it is also better for back close every fall, and occasional planting.

How Butter May be Spoiled.

Good butter may be spoiled in the churning. Over churning ruins the texture and changes the proper waxiness to a disagreeable, sticky greasiness. This is the more easily done in the churn with revolving dashes, which will press the butter against the side of the churn and squeeze and rub it until it is spoiled. Too long churning spoils the quality by the oxidation of the butter and the premature formation of strong flavored acids in it, the full preserving presence of which we call racidity. It may be spoiled by churning at too high a temperature, by which it is made soft and oily, and of a greasy texture and flavor. No subsequent treatment can remedy this error. It may be spoiled before the cream reaches the churn by keep. ing this too long, or what is practically the same, by keeping it in too warm a place; 50° is about the right temperature if cream is kept a week ; if it is kept at 62°, three days are long enough. White specks are produced in butter by overchurning, or by having the cream too sour. Either of these faults produces curd in the milk and the small flakes of this can not be washed out of the butter. Milk from a cow in ill health and that is acid when drawn, will produce specky butter. So will the use of salt containing particles of lime, which unite with the butter and form insoluble lime soap. White specks are covered up to a large extent by using good coloring, which is made of oil as the solv ent. But this use of coloring, being to disguise a fault and to add an undeserved virtue, is worthy of the denunciation of even the Farmers' Club .- Rural New Yorker.

"Oh ! there's mamma come to get me!" The sad, tired expression that rested on her face changed into one of joy and expectation as she gazed upward, and turning to one of the watchers by her side, she said :

"Won't you please open the door and let her in ?"

"Oh, I'm so glad you come, mamma; for maybe I couldn't have found you all alone, for heaven is so big."

Her lips trembled and moved after she had ceased speaking, as if she was whispering very low to some one, but no words escaped her until, as her face grew paler, she clasped her hands tighter and sobbed :

"Is that it over there, mamma? And is that God ?"
