The Issues of 1880. CONCLUDING PORTIONS OF THE SPEECH OF HON. CARL SCHURZ, AT INDIANAPOLIS, JULY 20, 1880. On the evening of Tuesday, the 20th ult., Hon. Carl Schurz, Secretary of the Interior, addressed a very large Republican meeting at Indianapolis. His speech was lengthy, covering the whole ground of present canvass, and we present below its concluding portions.

But let it never be forgotten that the Presidency is a trust that is due to no man, and that it is never to be considered as a thing belonging to him, and that it should only be bestowed for services to be rendered in the way of patriotic and enlightened statesmanship. But above all things, the Presidency should never be pointed at as the goal of ambition to the professional soldier.

What have we on the other hand in the Republican candidate? His youth was that of a poor boy. He lived by his daily labor. He rose up from that state gradually, by his own efforts, to the position of the experience of poverty and hard work and a lively sympathy with the poor and hard-working man.

It might go with the catalogue to show you where the path of safety lies; but it is enough. Your own State of Indiana furnishes you at this moment a most instructive illustration. Look at the contending forces here. On the one hand a man put forward by the Democrats...

It is a matter of great promise in all these things. In a few months you will have to make your choice. I know that when a party has been so long in power as the Republican party, many citizens may be moved by a desire for a change.

What, is there, then, on the Democratic side which could seduce you from the path of safety? It is the nomination for the Presidency of a soldier who, during the war, did brave deeds and deserved well of the country? It is a sense of gratitude for those brave deeds that should make you elevate the soldier to the place in which a statesman is wanted?

Hancock as a Brute.

It is not our intention at the present time to expend any campaign ammunition on Gen. Hancock. We have no need of so doing for we have alleged facts in regard to his ways recorded five years before his name was ever mentioned in connection with the Presidency...

"This morning we started early. The day has been intensely hot, the dust almost insufferable. Gen. Hancock was in command of his brigade. We had made a rapid march of about ten miles. The men were fatigued, footsore and thirsty. In many instances, two or three having to be carried on stretchers, and some of them were in a state of unconsciousness...

The Party of Free Ballots? The Yazoo Rebel's Plan.—They Don't Intend Any Votes Shall be Cast for Garfield There. F. P. Dixon, the brother of H. N. Dixon, the victim of the assassin Barkside, has just returned to Washington, from Yazoo City, Miss., whither he went against the wishes of his friends to see his brother's widow before she died.

But it was not cold-hearted indifference only that characterized Hancock's conduct toward the men under his command. He was mischievously meddling. Dr. Castelman writes under date of March 13: "The effects of Gen. Hancock's vindictive meddling with the medical department are beginning to manifest themselves."

Cemeteries for Dead Confederate Soldiers. Southern Democrats are now quietly arguing that the political disabilities of those who participated in the rebellion having been removed, and the living relics of the rebellion having been thereby absolved from all taints of treason, the time has come when immunity should be extended to the rebel graves, and the dead be treated as magnanimously as the living Confederates.

And for these reasons, in my opinion, the interests of the Republic demand the election of James A. Garfield to the Presidency of the United States. And for these reasons, in my opinion, the interests of the Republic demand the election of James A. Garfield to the Presidency of the United States.
