CARACAS CHOCOLATE

made from the finest grade chocolate bean that grows, and possessing the following advantages: No soap required; no waste as in the case of tea, coffee, and chocolate in cakes, is not nauseating, but on the contrary agreeable to the weakest stomach; can be used in warm weather as it contains no heating properties; the most economical as it requires less for a drink than any other; well adapted to dyspepsia as it is extracted, which fact also enables it to dissolve and impart its strength immediately upon being placed in scalding water without the usual process of boiling up first.

KENDALL'S SPAIN CURE.

THE MOST SUCCESSFUL REMEDY ever discovered, as it cures all kinds of skin and does not blister. READ PROOF BELOW.

From Rev. P. N. Granger,

Presiding Elder of the St. Albans District.

St. Albans, Vt., Jan. 20th, 1880.—Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gentles:—In reply to your letter I will say that my experience with "Kendall's Spain Cure" has been very satisfactory indeed. Three or four years ago I procured a bottle of your medicine, and used it on a horse named "Kendall's Spain Cure." Last season my horse became very lame and I turned him out for a few weeks when he became better, but when I put him on the road he grew worse, and when I discovered that a ringbone was forming, I procured a bottle of Kendall's Spain Cure, and with less than a bottle cured him so that he is now lame, neither can he be found.

Respectfully Yours, P. N. GRANGER.

PERSEVERANCE WILL TELL.

Sherborn, Mass., March 16th, 1880.—Dr. B. J. Kendall & Co., Gentles:—In reply to your letter I will say that my experience with "Kendall's Spain Cure" has been very satisfactory indeed. Three or four years ago I procured a bottle of your medicine, and used it on a horse named "Kendall's Spain Cure." Respectfully Yours, CHAS. E. PARKER.

Kendall's Spain Cure is sure in its effects, mild in its action as it does not blister, yet it is penetrating and powerful to reach every deep-seated pain, to remove any bony growth, to enlarge, such as spavins, splints, curbs, callous, sprains, swellings, any lameness and all enlargements of the joints, and to remove any bony growth, and for any purpose for which a liniment is used for man or beast. It is now known to be the best remedy for all such cases. Photographs and circulars which we think give positive proof of its virtues. No remedy has ever met with such qualified success to our knowledge, for best as well as cheap.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All Dealers have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors. D. B. J. KENDALL & CO., Embury Falls, Vermont.

The Muses' Bower.

Watching the Storm.

By MRS. EMILY THORNTON.

Wearied, dull and heavy-hearted, on a course of thought I started. Once, while seated by a window, where a thick fringe parted. But while my eyes were resting, with sweet fancies bright and cheering, I was startled from my day-dream by a dense, black cloud appeared in the distance. On a sudden, and my heart rebelled, as children do when scolded. It was hard to curb the yearning, which arose without reason. That a father's loving, faithful hand the wheel of life was turning.

But I battled back this feeling, which around my mind started stealing. And I wheeled to face the window, thus the storm I watched the grasses quiver, and the oaks and lindens shiver. While I saw a heavy mist arise above the rushing river. Then rough, rude winds came slanting, and tossed huge branches round me. While tufts of grasses quivered, and the oaks and lindens shiver. While a sudden flash of thunder seemed to cleave the dark cloud under.

Above the tumult rising high, I heard a low and mournful cry. Which started—then I saw a flock of frightened birds whirled swiftly by. Blinding grew the lightning flashes, rain upon the ground, a bluish overcast spread, and at length, beneath his prolonged gaze, she sank slowly on one knee, half terrified lest she might have offended a personage exalted.

"Who is this young girl?" asked the sovereign, turning from one of his attendants to another; but none answered till Jaromir spoke. "So please your highness, it is my betrothed, Ivanova, the daughter of Maria, the widow."

"It is well, Jaromir," said the Grand Prince. "Come with us; we would question thee further." To dispute the will of the sovereign would have been high treason. The young huntsman was compelled to leave his bride and depart with the royal party. The young men and maidens who had assembled to witness the betrothal, returned to their homes, and Jaromir threw himself into his mother's arms, and wept bitterly, with a vague sense of impending calamity.

Three days after Ivanova and her mother were summoned to court by a special order from the Grand Prince. Jaromir had not returned. None save the secret agents of the sovereign knew that he languished in solitary imprisonment, in his betrothed's prison, while the proudest nobles of the land gazed in admiration upon her unrivalled and wondrous beauty. Gorgeous music accompanied the procession, and the shouts and huzzas of the people rent the air on every side, mingled with the peal of trumpets, while banners waved triumphantly, and flowers strewn the way over which the royal bride rode to pass. But her face was pale as marble, and the jewels that glittered on her brow, but marked the sadness of her downcast eyes. Still she moved on, the wonder of all who beheld her—the beloved of the monarch at her side, the victim adorned for the sacrifice.

The ceremony was at an end; and the prospect of the royal palace, and long and loud shouts of "Long live the Grand Prince! Long live the princess!" were the signal of unbridled joy and festivity throughout the capital. More than a year had passed. In an apartment of the royal abode a wasted figure reclined on a couch, surrounded by luxury and elaborate adornment which seemed to contrast more sadly with the illness and pain than would be the humblest dwelling of poverty. Two or three attendants moved softly to and fro, and one had taken her station by the side of the couch to watch the slumbering sufferer. It was the Grand Princess—who had been so lately a bride—who now lay upon the couch.

All at once a slight convulsion passed over her pallid features; she opened her eyes, raised her thin wasted hand slowly, and pointed to the door. This was opened a moment after, and an attendant whispered to the nurse, "It is the priest."

"Let him enter!" was the answer, and the holy man approached the dying. "He stood silent for a moment, then bending over her, whispered in her ear the single word—'Ivanova.'"

A bright flash illuminated for an instant the face of the princess; a light came into her eyes. "Thou art come at last, she murmured faintly; my spirit summoned thee, Jaromir!" At this point the priest, who had been summoned to the bedside, stepped forward, and in a voice of anguish, "God hath appointed us both to suffer on earth. His will be done."

"Farewell, Jaromir!" "We shall meet in heaven!" The sufferer strove, but vainly, to rise; her eyes were fixed on him who spoke those words of hope; and an ecstatic expression to her still beautiful face an appearance almost angelic. "We shall meet in heaven!" she repeated, in a low murmur; and with the words that have calmed so many breaking hearts—that have smoothed so many partings—that have lifted so many sorrowing souls above the woes of this world—yet trembling upon her lips—her gentle and innocent spirit passed away.

The young girl looked into her mother's face a moment with an expression of surprise amounting to terror, and then turned away and covered her face with her hands. "Thou art not thinking of dear mother, art
