

Steamboat burnt and loss of life.

We learn from the Montreal papers that the steamboat John Bull, which cost £22,000, was destroyed by fire early in the morning of the 10th inst., eight miles above Sorel, on her way to Montreal. The boat was run ashore, and two boats fortunately in time, saved the cabin passengers twelve in number, except Miss Rose, who fell in the water. There were 60 deck or steerage passengers, of whom twelve were drowned by jumping overboard during the confusion. It has since been ascertained that at least sixteen are missing, eight of whom were emigrants. One woman has lost six children; she had nine on board with her, and three only escaped. The confusion among the passengers was such, that as soon as a boat would reach the steamer, the rush was so great that many fell in the river. One woman caught hold of a rope tied around the neck of a Newfoundland dog, who in this instance, as in many others, behaved gallantly and towed her ashore. The fire having originated in one of the engine rooms, it was impossible to stop the wheel, which kept going a considerable time after the boat was aground; one boat with several persons on board, was drawn under the wheel, and every one perished. Very few of the cabin passengers saved their baggage, and several have suffered considerably.

The Redlander, of Nacogdoches, states that an express arrived there with intelligence that the Cherokees had embodied near the Sabine, determined to make war upon any troops who may attempt to build a fort there in conformity with the orders of the Secretary of War. Maj. Waters calls for reinforcements to enable him to carry the order into effect. The people in that part of Texas were preparing for a conflict with the Cherokees.—N. Orleans paper June 19th.
