

REMARKS

MR. McLANAHAN, IN SENATE, JANUARY 27, 1842, ON THE RESOLUTIONS OFFERED BY MR. EWING, ENTITLED, A RESOLUTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

MR. McLANAHAN did not intend to occupy much of the time of the Senate in preliminary remarks, but would endeavor to lay hold of the subject under consideration...

That the Banks should now be compelled to resume the payment of specie, is a measure upon which all parties seem to have agreed. It once was considered as an article of political faith only to be found in the creed of the democrat.

Sir, we are now imperatively called upon, as the representatives of the people, to compel these delinquent institutions to redeem their liabilities and fulfill their engagements.

Mr. Speaker, I am fearful that I have already not only trespassed on the rules of the Senate, but on the patience of the Senators. I cannot however resume my seat, without expressing my surprise at the great revolution in the political sentiments of Washington.

Stability in prices is the necessary element of prosperity in business. But this can never be when we have a multitude of banks, uncontrolled and uncontrollable, to furnish "wholesale and retail" paper substitutes for money.

Mr. Speaker, I consider it due to myself to state now, that the Senator from Butler grossly misunderstood me, when he supposed, in the remarks I made yesterday, that I intended to cast any odium upon his leaders, himself, or his constituents.

the richest and now the poorest country in Europe.

No sooner had she made a conquest of Spanish America than her ruin commenced. In the beginning of the 15th century, Spain abounded in manufactures and commerce. Her coffers were filled with gold and silver from her American possessions.

Again, why is it that our manufacturers are constantly struggling in spite of a continual augmenting protective tariff from 1815 to 1832, the period of nullification and compromise. Because, sir, a continuous increase during all that time in paper currency, produced a continuous increase in prices.

The discussion was further continued by Messrs. Ewing, Sullivan, Spackman, Farrelly, Gibbons, Headly, Stewart and Fleming when Mr. McLanahan again took the floor.

Mr. McLANAHAN said he would vote for the postponement of the subject which now engaged the attention of the Senate, until Monday next, for the reason, that after the elaborate argument of the gentleman from Mercer, Senators, should have time to reflect before they acted.

aptness of classic allusion seldom equalled. I claim no such pre-eminence—all I hoped for, was, if not able, at least honestly to advocate the true interest of the republic.

As to the Senator from Washington, I feel most happy to meet him on the broad arena of politics. Not as an antagonist, but as a co-operator in the great work of popular reform.

The Senator from the city has eloquently proved himself the watchful sentinel of the banks. He has defined his position most clearly. But, sir, the doctrines he advocates are too weak to sustain him, and even his strong intellectual powers too feeble to sustain them.

From the Pittsburg Sun, January 26. A suit, Keller vs. Sutton, of considerable importance relating to our currency, was tried before Justice Watson on Thursday week.

Many of his public efforts within the walls of this Capitol are the productions of a master pen. And in more than one instance exhibited an elegance of diction, and an

and failed, on the 13th of October, being the day preceding the payment, as aforesaid, by defendants to plaintiff. The payment having been made in good faith, and both parties being ignorant, at the time thereof, that the Bank had failed, the Court held that this payment was a valid one and the debt satisfied.

DARING AND ATROCIOUS MURDER.

The borough of Reading was thrown into considerable excitement, on Monday evening, the 31st ult., about dusk, by the announcement that the body of a woman, evidently murdered, had been found near town.

After an absence of an hour or two, the man returned to the tavern alone, and made some inquiry for his wife, stating that he had lost her. He remained there until the next morning about 9 o'clock.

We should have stated that about 9 o'clock on Sunday evening he enquired for the key to the room which had been occupied by himself and wife. Upon learning that his wife had it, he left the house, and was absent about an hour.

Several individuals were arrested on suspicion, but nothing appearing against them they were discharged.

A SHOCKING MURDER.

One of the most brutal murders on record, was committed in our city on Friday night. This murder was committed by a man named Fletcher Heath, on the body of Adelia Harris, a mulatto woman.

After this attempt at assassination, Heath seized a bowie knife from the drawer of Wells, rushed down to the house of Adelia Harris, and murdered her in a most brutal manner.
