After graduating with honor here, he entered the Theological Seminary at Princeton, where he spent two years in preparation for the important duties of the ministerial office; and the carnest he gave there of future usefulness and celebrity, was in the highest degree gratifying to his friends. Being young, however, and fearing that his health might suffer from toe continued application, he determined before completing his treelogical studies to spend one or two years in the south in teaching; and was, at the time of his death, engaged as an assistant teacher in Oakland College. It is, not many months since he was with us, in the full bloom of health and in high hope for the future; and while the recollection of our intercentrse during his last visit here is still fresh in our memory, the said intelligence of his death ribgs in mournful tones upon our ears.
