WY J. B. LOVELL,
I nover gaze upon thy form,
Or mark thy self, blue eye,
When "floats a dream of lovellness,
Pure, passionate, and high,"
But that my heart must thrill with Joy,
And flutter with delight,
To viow, thy, spettless innocence
In childhood's sunny light.

O' could I crave a boon for thee
The cartie can never give,
It would not be a worldy crown,
For which so many live;
But it would be a spotest life,
Of innocence and pence,
Such as would guit not thee a home
Where bliss shall never cease.

A thorny mate, my lovely boy,
Thy destiny may be,
From which a father's tender care
Can inver rescue thee,
But could my wishes be obtained,
Thy pathway shutd, be free
From all corroding griefs and cares
That have surrounded me.

As time shall wing its onward flight,
'Twill change that rosy glean
Which lingers on thy parian brow,
'in childhood's pleading droam.
The spacking eye may yet be dimm'd
'With grief's unbidden tear.
'Where no fond mother's dear caress,
'Or father's smile can cheer:

Though now thou'll fondly cling to inc. (11.26). My little smiling boy:
Thou hast a place within my heart,
None clac gould e'er cnjoy.
Then as thy fleeting moments pass,
May lave and joy be thine;
Around one altar may we kneel,
And worship at one shrine.

There is still a more pleasing thought— Entranced upon my heart, That though on earth we sonarate, And from each other part. There is a place of endless bliss. Where we may must near Where we may meet again, To join the chorus of the skies In heaven's sweetest strain!

UNIVERSAL FAME

BY J. E. PAULDING.

It is amizing to pheerve how little mankind know of each other, although thowards of human makine whispers beery distinguished person, that his faine is or will one day he universal. The myrinds of Asia and Africa, with a few solitary exceptions, abeer the and a first of the illusticity herces, statemen, poets and philosophers of Europe; and a vast portion of the inhabitants of the latter, are ignorunt of the very names of the great men of the east. But instead of an essay we will give our readers a story to illustrate our meaning.

"Pshaw!" said the Yankee,—"all your heroes and philosophers put together, would not make one Franklin, or half a Washington."

"Gentlemen," said the Greek, "you may boast as much as you will, but had it not been for Greek warriose, philosophers, poets and sages, you would all have remained barbarians to this day. What think you of Homer, and Echylus, and Sophoeles, and Euripides, and Demosthenes, and Mittades, and Them; istocles, and ten thousand others, whose fame extends to the attermost ends of the carth?"

"Who are those blockheads talking about?" asked the Egyptian, the Chinese, the Persian, and the Turk, of each other.

"Talking of?" cried the rest, with one voice,—

"Of the lights of the world, the children of immortality, the heirs of uniquesal fame!"

By the time the period fixed for the termination of his education has arrived, he is sent out on the world with a heterogeneous mass of half-digested Latin and Greek in his mind, of no earthly use for any practical purpose, and the chances are that he will forget the little knowledge he has acquired in bine year after he receives his diploma. How many of youth are there who have not submitted to this grinding process of being taught this high pressure system of education!

The design of our higher colleges is to produce finished scholars; but how can they do it with such a system of education as we speak of? How often, says Bishop Doane, "are the names of Platon and Tolly upon tongues that have not mastered the elements of their respective languages! Hox, many have found over. Virgil, without a trace of his refinement, or Homer, without a dream of his immutable truth to nature!" True for him, and sorrry are we that we have so many living evidences of the truth of the remark.
