RAISING THE DEAD

A few nights ago a medical friend of ours was quietly sitting down in his office after the cares and fatigues of the day, envoloped in a capacious dressing gown and putting away at a highly perfumed cigar, and meditating upon the mutabilty of human sifiairs, when he heard voices in the street and soon a knocking at his door. Leisurely getting up and opening it he discovered three men, two of them in very thick coats, with round glazed caps upon their keads, and clubs in their hands, and the third, who was a mapparently at the street them. was supported between them, was in apparently a dying condition, groaning out, "Oh! I'm killed, I'm Docther," exclaimed one of the watchmen, "this 'man says he's kilt, and we want you to examine him 'and' see if his story is correct or no."

"Oh, I'm sure I'm killed," said the man.

"If you're sure of it, what ud you be seeing the docther an asking him questions for?" said the watchman. "If you'er dead be quire while I tell the docther! Ye see, docther he's been in a little bit of a ther! Ye see docther he's been in a little bit of a serimmage up here an' got a bad cut on his pate, an' it'ud be betther for you to fix it."

The doctor assented, and the patient was brought in and deposited in a chair by the watchmen, who went outside while he examined the man. He found that he had an ugly cut on the forchead which bled profusely, and after taking a stich or two, washing off the blood, and putting on a piece of adhesive plaster, the doctor told him he was more frightened than hurt, and worth a thousand dead men at that moment.

"Well, doctor," said the relieved nationt, "it was a mighty ugly blow, and knocked me over as flat as a shingle, and I thought I was a goner. What is your lee, sir, for fixing me up?"

"Five dollars, sir," said the doctor.

"That's your regular fee, is it?"
"Yes, sir, for a case of the kind."
"Well, doctor here's a V, and I'm much obliged to you to boot. Now, sir, will you be kind enough to tell me where that little door at the side of your

"Certaintly," replied the doctor pocketing his fee, that leads into an alley."

"And where does that alley lead to?"
"It leads into the street."

What, the man you brought here?"

"Yis."
"Oh, he's gone—went some time sgo,"
"Gone, and where is he gone to?"
"He'may have gone to the devil for all I know, plied the doctor coolly.
"How did he get out?"
"By the back alley."
"And where does the alley lead to?"

"And where does the alley lead to 7"

COLLECTING CHOICE SEEDS

As the season for planting is fast approaching, the following remarks in regard to the selection of seed which we copy from the Boston Cultivator, will need to be useful to many of our readers. "There no way in which improvement can be made in agr no way in which improvement can be much in all-culture, at so small an expense, as by collecting seeds of a superior variety of vegetables, trees and scions of superior fruits, and superior animals. It costs no more to raise a crop of an excellent variety, if we except the harvesting of a large crop, to cultivate superior fruit, or keep the best animals, than to al-tend to those of interior kinds which yield 25 or 30 per cent less. er cent less.

There is a vast difference in different varieties'o vogetables; in some cases by the expense of one del-lar, in time or money, in getting a superior variety, there may be ten or twelve dollars added to the value of a crop on an acre of land; and a valuable crop or a crop on an acro or land; and a valuable crop being once obtained, perhaps it can be continued for many years, affording an annual advantage; in return for a little attention to this mode of improvement. In planting different varieties of potatoes on the same land, and under the same treatment, we find that some kinds yield almost twice as much as others, while there is no material difference in the price. gain, some kinds that do not rot, are now worth ollar a barrel more than those subject to decay, an thich were sold while the price was low.

Sometimes a single ear of corn may be worth mor lollars to the farmer than the rows it contains; may even make a difference to that amount annually Some oats mildiow almost invariably, whilst other are almost wholly free from this affection. There is also a vest difference in the weight of oats; some weighing almost twice as much as others, and yield ing as many bushels.

Some squashes, on account of their purity, will sell twice as high in the market as others, to say nothing of the advantage of having a superior article

's own use. It is about the same with all other regetables:

It is about the same with all other regetables: a gardener would do better by paying a dollar an ounce for cabbage seed of a pure variety than to have poer seed given him. And we have known cases in which cultivators would have paid that price cheerfully rather than run the risk of sowing poor seed.

There is a great variety of turnips, some adapted to very early use, others late in succession in the summer; some for fall, others for early winter, and a few that keep as a parsnip for spring use; there is a great advantage in having kinds adapted to their peculiar season. ıliar season.

The seed business, as a general thing, is not propose in the finest animal.

The seed business, as a general thing, is not proposed and there is fault in all concerned; the seed grower and the purchaser. The purchaser aims too much at buying cheap, some make this the only criterion. Then the dealer is induced to buy cheap, and to this end he may sometimes import seeds, at a low price, and not offer the seed grower enough to pay for raising. Foreign seed are often worthless or fulse to their marks. We have no doubt that foreign seed-doalers send to this country their old, worthless seeds.
