intention, the ensuing fall I voted the whole regularly nominated Democratic ticket.

The Tariff of 1846; having been passed the same year, after a care all-examination of vis merits, when year, after a care all-examination of vis merits, when yentrated with the one of 42, I hearily endorsed. It has been fully tested, and despite Whig predictions, not even a sectional interest has been injured by its operations. The Independent Treasury, having been hastily repealed, again became a Law at the same assisting of Congress. This wise and timely restriction on stock-jobbing and speculation with Government monies, before at the unsafe disposal of Bank officers, their favorites and public defaulters, meets with the angualified approbation of every candid, unprejudiced man. In the fall of 1847, I again voted the whole Democratic ticket. The war and the new Tariff were brought into this memorable campaign; both measures were triumplantly vindicated, and a severe rebulke given to the Whig prity by the people of Pennsylvania, who gave a signal majority of 18,000 for Francis R. Shunk.

We have now before us focus Cass for the Presidence of the control of the measures.
