Washington, Feb. 25th, 1849.

Gen. Taylor is gradually recovering from his indisposition, and is able every day to see a few friends, provided they willife hake his hand like a pump handle. Last evening, all 8 o'clock, I um certain no Cabinet had been fixed upon; but since that time pretty distinct rumbrs have gone forth, that Mr. Horace Binney, of Philadelphia hus been offered the Treasury Department. This would, of course, stop short every other Cabinet appointment from Pennayivania, provided Mr. Binney accept it. I know that General Taylor dreamt of Mr. Binney at Baton Rouge, and that from the beginning he was determined to call him to his Council. If Mr. Binney accepts it, he will no doubt, in point of capacity and integrity of character of the distinguished gentlemen selected, be the most brilliant appointment that can be made from the Whig ranks.

Mr. Abbott Lawrence is now pretty generally talked of as Secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury, then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Treasury then the great merchant are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Mr. Binney are the secretary of the Navy; but should Mr. Binney refuse the Mr. Binney refuse the Mr. Binney are the secretary of the Mr. Binney refuse the Mr. Binney refuse the Mr. Binne
