Poetical.
THE LOVER'S LIST.
BY MRS. OSBORN.
"Come sit on the bank so shady,
Sweet Evelyn, sit with me!
How many may they be?
How many may they be?"
The maiden smiled on her lover,
And traced, with her little hand,
Of names a dozen and over,
Down in the shining sand.
"And now," said Evelyn, rising,
"I'll give you my list, if you please!
And if there be no disagreeing,
The list will not number these."
Then count them truly, rover!
And the noble Knight exclaim'd:
"I'll give names a dozen and over,
He traced within the shade."
Fair Evelyn posted proudly!
She sigh'd, "Will he never have done?"
"And at last she murmured loudly,
"I thought he would write but one."
"Now read," said the fair youth rising,
"The scroll—it is fair and true!
In truth, there is no disagreeing,
That list is the world to me!"
She read it with joy and wonder,
For the first was her own sweet name!
And again and again written down,
It was still—'twas still the same!

DISCUSSION.
A SINGULAR STORY.
The Washington correspondent of the Quaker City, a paper published in Philadelphia by Mr. Lippard, communicates, says the Louisville Courier, the following curious account of a recent remarkable dream had by Mr. Calhoun. We have not much faith in "supernatural appearances, but if anything could lead the ghost of the 'Father of his Country' to revisit the realm beneath the moon, it would be the thought that his beloved country was in danger of disunion, which is but another name for civil war. We give the story for what it is worth:
WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.
The other morning at the breakfast table, where I, an unobserved spectator, happened to be present, Calhoun was observed to gaze frequently at his right hand and brush it with his left, in a nervous and hurried manner. He did this so often that it excited attention. At length one of the persons composing the breakfast party, his name I think is Tombs, and he is a member of Congress from Georgia, took upon himself to ask the occasion of Mr. Calhoun's disquietude.
"Does your hand pain you?" he asked.
"To this Calhoun replied in rather a hurried manner: 'Pain is it nothing? Only a dream which I had last night, and which makes me see perpetually a black spot—like an ink blotch—upon my right hand. An optical delusion, I suppose.'"
Of course these words naturally excited the curiosity of the company, but no one ventured to beg the details of this singular dream, till Tombs asked abruptly:
"What do you dream like? I'm not very superstitious about dreams; but sometimes they have a good deal of truth in them."
"But the way was such a peculiar, absurd dream," said Mr. Calhoun, again brushing the back part of his right hand—however if it does not too much intrude upon the time of our friends, I will relate it."
"Of course the company were prepared in their expressions of anxiety to know all about the dream—In his singularly sweet voice, Mr. Calhoun related it."
"At a late hour last night, as I was sitting in my room, engaged in writing, I was attracted by the entrance of a visitor, who entered, and without a word took a seat opposite me, at my table. This surprised me, as I had given particular orders to the servant, that I should on no account be disturbed. The man, I noticed, was dressed in a simple, plain, and without a word, as though my room and all within it belonged to him, excited in me as much surprise as indignation. As I raised my head to look into his features, over the top of my shaded lamp, I discovered that he was wrapped in a thin cloak, which almost effectually concealed his face and features from my view. And as I raised my head he spoke."
"What are you writing, Senator from South Carolina?"
"I did not think of his impertinence at first but answered him involuntarily—"
"I am writing a plan for the Dissolution of the American Union, you know, gentlemen that I am expected to produce a Plan of Dissolution in the event of certain contingencies."
"To this the intruder replied in the coolest manner possible:—"
"Senator from South Carolina, will you allow me to look at your hand, your right hand?"
"He rose, the clock fell, and I beheld his face—a thunder clap. It was the face of a dead man, whom extraordinary events have called back to life. The features were those of George Washington, yes, gentlemen, the intruder was none other than George Washington. He was dressed in the revolutionary costume, such as you see preserved in the Patent Office."
"Of course Calhoun paused, apparently much agitated. His agitation, I need not tell you, was shared by the company. Tombs at length broke the embarrassing pause.
"Well, well, what was the issue of this scene?"
"Mr. Calhoun then resumed: "This intruder, as I have said, arose and asked to look at my right hand. Although I had not the power to refuse, I extended it. The truth is, I felt a strange chill pervade me at his touch; he grasped it and held it near the light, thus affording me a full time to examine every feature of his face: it was the face of Washington. Gentlemen, I shuddered as I beheld the horribly deformed look of that visage. After holding my hand for a moment, he looked at me steadily, and said in a quiet way:

"And with this right hand, Senator from South Carolina, you would sign your name to a paper declaring the Union dissolved?"
"I answered in the affirmative. "Yes," said I, "if a certain contingency arises I will sign my name to the Declaration of 'Disunion.' But at that moment I beheld him disappear on the back of my hand, an ink blot, which I seem to see even now." "What is that?" cried I, alarmed I knew not why at the blotch upon my hand.
"That," said he, dropping my hand, "that is the mark by which Benedict Arnold is known in the next world."
"He said no more, gentlemen, but drew from under his cloak an object which he placed upon the table—placed it upon the very paper on which I was writing. That object, gentlemen, was a skeleton."
"There," said he, "there are the bones of Isaac Hayne, who was hung in Charleston by the British. He gave his life in order to establish the Union—When you put your name to a Declaration of the Union, why may as complete the bones of Isaac Hayne before you; he was a South Carolinian, and so are you. But there was no blotch upon my right hand."
"With these words the intruder left the room. I started back from the contact with the dead man's bones and—awoke. Overcome by labor, I had fallen asleep and been dreaming. Was it not a singular dream?"
"All the company answered in the affirmative—"
"Single—very singular!" at the same time looking rather curiously at the back of his right hand—and Mr. Calhoun, placing his hand between his hands, seemed to be buried in thought.

Blessed and baneful are so closely coupled in all matters pertaining to the good things of life, that we need wonder at a kind of ink-blot, and all prepared for a good sort of a woman's wit to speak her mind, but meaning no harm,—"with so little appearance of penetration or will intent do her greatest stabs come. She does not report what she has heard—or she is full of good authority—or she did not say more than she said! In the course of a morning visit, she will skid a whole street of her own, and she will not be content with the most fastidious palate. And it must not be thought that women are the only sinners in this regard. There are men, too, who, without the excuse of vanity or idleness, take a dreadful pleasure in stirring up the passions of the world, and in which they apply to the world, and this under a pretence of love of truth and justice! This disinterested champion of truth and justice are the last men to lay bare their own consciences secret faults to the public eye for the public good.
