then ascertain whether, when the capital of a Bank has become valueless, or nearly so, the notes will be at any better rate. If the system is so infallible even in these prosperous times, when almost anything may do for banking capital, as some folks think, how happens it that the Altis bank of New York, a free bank, is quoted in the Reporter as "bloke," and her notes are selling at 30 cents on the dellar? Why do not the State stocks, pledged for the payment of her notes pay them, or prevent them from selling at so, heavy a discount? It would be gratifying to have this explained; and until there is some better assurance that the was $420,295,130—in 1848, $463,031,458, being in horease in three vears of $42,753,328.
