There werds many remarks in the address which suggested to his mind considerations which he would very much like to express: They had wished him the success of Washington. That was, indeed, a glorious success; nor did it abate anything of its glory, that nineteen millions of European money, trenty thousand arms, thirty mon of wer, and three thousand European troops were-contributed to the success of this country. He had always believed that freedom enobled the heart, and he had, indeed, found it so in the United States. The people were fill of these noble sentiments, which could be derived only from the glorious source of freedom. He would hope that one simogat the peculiar realities of these noble sentiments which could be derived only from the glorious source of freedom. He would hope that one simogat the peculiar realities of these noble sentiments would be the remembrance of received aid. They had expressed the tupe that Drive Providence would yet give freedom to his country. So he hoped; but Divine Providence acted through the instrumentaticy of men-Divine Provi-dence had liberated him from captivity; but by what instrumentality was to liberated T By the instru-mentality of the genorose people of the U.
