

ODDS AND ENDS.

OUT OF THE TAVERN.
Out of the tavern I've just stopped tonight.
Right hand and left hand are both of place Street; you are drunk! 'tis a very clear case.
Moon, 'tis a very queer figure you cut:
One eye is staring while 't'her is shut.
Tippy, I see, and you're greatly to blame—Old as you are, 'tis a terrible shame.
Then the street-lamps, what a scandalous sight!
None of them soberly standing upright—Rooping and staggering, met on my road, Each of the lamps is drunk as a lord.
All is confusion; now isn't it odd?
I am the only thing sober around!
Bore I was rash with the crew to remain—Better to go into the tavern again!

DEATH is often a mysterious benefactor of human lineaments, and marvellously did it alter those of the great Napoleon. When he was disinterred, and the face exposed, every one exclaimed, "How very beautiful!" The beauty of the delicately Italian features was of the highest kind, while in the most striking contrast with the recollection of his great actions, impetuous character, and turbulent life.
GIR and SUGAR gets up a funny scene now and then. The other day we saw a couple of "Greeks" so far gone in the region of lody sticks, that they were wrangling about the birth place of Columbus.
While one insisted that he was Corkonian, the other maintained that he was "a county of Limerick man." When we left, the barkeeper was acting as umpire, between a pair of upraised axes.

It is rumored that a correspondence has taken place between the Bloomer reformers and Gen. Scott.
The General, supposing that the women intended to entrap him, very politely informed them that all women that wore shorts should be strangled.

A GOOD DEACON, at a conference meeting in the town of D—, about thirty miles north of Boston, addressed his auditors one Sabbath evening as follows:—
"My friends, there is a new doctrine going round now-a-days. We are told that all mankind are equal to Heaven. But, my brethren and sisters, we hope for better things!"

UNCLE SAM—I would rather dwell in the dim fog of superstition, than in an air rarified to nothing by the air-pump of unbelief, in which the panting breast expire, vainly and convulsively gasping for breath.
John P. Richter.

READY MADE ANGELS.—Our language can scarcely show a more delicate and beautiful compliment to woman, than that conveyed in the following lines, attributed to Lord Herbert, an English nobleman, and addressed to an Italian lady, whom he met in a country.
"Die when you will, you need not fear, At Heaven's court, a form more fair, Than beauty, at your birth, has given;
Keep but the lips, the eyes we see, The voice we hear, and you will be An angel ready for heaven."

When men will not be reasoned out of a vanity, they must be ridiculed out of it.

"Society is the world's great gall," exclaimed Mrs.
Farrington, on finding out the price current. "Why, bless me, what is the world coming to, when the galles are valued at seventy-five cents?" The old lady piled off her spectacles, threw down her paper and went into a brown study on the want of a proper appreciation of the true value of the feminine gender.

A FELLOW applied to an optician for a pair of spectacles, and after he had measured and fitted them, did not read with them. "Could you ever read?" inquired the optician. "No," said the fellow, "if I could, you think me so great an ass as to wish to read glasses?"

EMIGRATION TO LIBERIA.—Rev. W. D. Shumate, Secretary of the Missouri Colonization Society, states that Capt. Andrew A. Reade, who has lately placed all his slaves, twenty four in number, at the disposal of the Society, upon the condition that they be immediately colonized in Liberia. The board has accepted the generous offer.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.—There is a coffee house in Cincinnati, which has for a sign an inverted bowl.
Can you guess what it signifies? What words that booby? The Daily Commercial says that it signifies foot up!

A GENTLEMAN delivering an oration in favor of "woman, dear woman!" ended it with these words:
"Oh, sir, nothing beats a good wife." "I beg pardon," said one of the company, "a bad husband does."

A SHOEMAKER, being enamored of a young girl, while writing his suit, assured her that he loved her as he did his own sole, and that she would find him true to the last!

"I am sent to the ant, to learn industry, to the dove, to learn innocence; to the serpent, to learn to learn wisdom, and why not to the robin-redbreast, who chants it as cheerily in winter as in summer, to learn equanimity and patience."

A YOUNG gentleman the other day asked a young lady what she thought of the married state in general. "Not knowing 'can't tell," was the reply. "But if you and I were to put our heads together, I could soon give you a definite answer."

ZORASTER, it is said, thought the most profound philosopher of his time, theoretically, was very easily put out of temper. He once carried his irritability so far as to break a marble table to pieces with hammer, because he chanced to stumble over it in the dark.

SHAKESPEARE, though one of the most generous of men, was a great higger. He was known to dispute with a shopkeeper for an hour, on the matter of a penny. He gives Hotspur credit for a portion of his own disposition, when he makes him say, "I would avail on the ninth part of a hair."

"Mr. Brown, why do you wear that awful hat hair?" "Because, my dear sir, Mrs. Brown would not go out of the house with me, unless I got a new one!"

"I feel," said an old lady, "that I've got about through with this world. I shall enjoy much more peace, nor suffer much more comfort."

IF A FOOT, known a secret, he tells it because he is a fool; if a knave knows one, he tells it whenever it is in his interest to tell it. But women and young men are very apt to tell what secrets they know, from the vanity of having been treated. Trust some of these whenever you can help it.—Copperfield.

THE MEX IN THE BUSINESS.—A down east post, in one of his separate efforts, thus eloquently said forth his choice of life:—
Some poets' theme is the foreign clime, Or 'tis on the raging sea,
But a life in the world with the country bloods,
And a fatter patch for me.

A GENTLEMAN observing a citizen passing who had lost an arm, said he presumed he might be called "an off-hand man."

A MAN named Stone, exclaimed in a tavern, "I'll bet a V I have the hardest man in the company." "I don't," said one of the company; "what's your name?"
"Stone," said the other; "I'll bet you the money," said the other, "my name is harder."

A GENTLEMAN residing in the neighborhood of Cork, on walking one Sunday evening met a young girl, whose parents lived near his house. "What are you doing, Fanny?" said he. "Looking for a son-in-law for my mother, sir," was the smart reply.
"Do you say so?" said he, the other day who actually declined to be a son-in-law. He thought she was quite a curiosity.

A HIR.—One of the witnesses of the Forrest case at New York, said he left her because his father had some doubts as to the intrinsic respectability of the legal profession!

An Ohio paper says, there is a post master in the town of Palestine who does not know the use of postage stamps. The ladies that they are "merely a city ornament."—Exchange.

Too TRUE.—An old Paris paper has the following singular remark:—"The Americans and English advocate their children in the fear of God and the love of money."

ALWAYS be as witty as you can with your parting bow—your last speech is the one remembered.
The man who had to lower his shirt collar to pass under the Whelling bridge, arrived in Cincinnati last week.
He was laboring under a slight attack of bridge morbus.

The just man will flourish, in spite of ory.

Agricultural.

Wheat Culture.
From the Pennsylvania Farm Journal.

In the interior of Pennsylvania, from whence state, wheat and corn may be said to be on a stable production; the cultivation of the former, being the more important, we propose to treat at present. Our soil is limestone, a tenacious red clay, highly impregnated with iron, and in many localities with an infusion of flint gravel. Wheat is usually put in land manured after an oat crop has been taken off, or upon a clover sod, plowed either before or after harvest. If the farmer desires to enrich his land by turning in a coat of clover, the work should always be done before harvest, and the reason for this is more important than obvious; for if plowed at this early stage of the season, the grass has had time to undergo the necessary fermentation, so that when the season arrives for sowing, it is in a better condition for mixing more intimately with the soil and diffusing its benefit more extensively to the growing grain; but if the plowing in of the grass be deferred to a later period, nearly approaching the time for sowing, the germination of the seed and the fermentation of the grass are going on at the same time, and these natural actions of both are wholly uncongenial with each other. The heat and sourness of fermentation certainly operates to prevent a healthful germination of the seed; and this we think is a most important period for the ultimate success of the crop; for we think it may be said, in perfect accordance with all experience, that no good crop ever resulted from an imperfect or unhealthy germination of seed. And here, in connection with this idea, it may be remarked, that the time for sowing should always be regulated by the condition of the ground, taking care that it should be neither too wet nor too dry, but just in such a state of moisture as will ensure the most spread and active germination and growth. Seed sown in ground too wet and cold has a tardy and sickly growth, while that put in ground too dry has no growth at all, until it gets moisture, and by this time, the seed is so injured by exposure, as rarely to grow, or to produce a remarkably good crop. Much discussion has been had, and great difference of opinion exists with regard to late and early sowing; our experience teaches, that there is no better rule by which to govern the subject, than this:—Sow at any time after the first of September, when the ground is in good order. You thus give the plant an active, healthy growth, and a constitution which enables it to withstand the many vicissitudes of the fall and the approaching winter.

The mode of plowing the ground, and the implement with which it is done, is worthy of much consideration than is usually given to it.— There are very many erroneous notions extant among farmers on this subject. A clover sod on our limestone land is of a very tough and tenacious character, and the plows in general use are calculated to make exceedingly bad work, for that which is called pretty plowing, when every land exhibits its exact shape and due proportion, in a mass as even or more solid than before it was turned up, is a wretched mode of accomplishing the object. If the work of ploughing be thus done, it is to be expected that the earth is a set of mouths and lungs that constantly feed upon the air and light of the natural elements, and that the soil and heat are as essential to its profitable existence, as they are to that of the animal; and that the object of plowing is to open these mouths and lungs instead of compacting it and making it impervious to light and heat, and food, we cannot hesitate about the use of an implement that will attain that object to the highest degree. If the farmer will but look with the eye of a mechanic upon his plow, and find the relative position of its beam and landside to be such that they are tending in different directions, he will perceive at once how much more power he is using than would be necessary, if his implement were a good one. But this is not the greatest objection, for one which we regard as of importance, is the great pressure against the land-side which is made by such a plow, giving it a solidity which can be only overcome by repeated harrowings. The centre-draught plow, which is not objectionable to the farmer, who requires much less power, must necessarily press more lightly upon the land, leaving it to fall into a pulverized state as it separates from the mould-board. Light is beginning to shine upon the farmer, and he is beginning to see that the plow which he has been using is a bad one, and that he must use a better one.

Wheat, with us, is now almost universally put in with a drill. It is sufficient to say in commendation of this mode that all the seed you use is actually planted and covered just at the depth which is the best for your soil and your own judgment dictate. The implement, if a good one, places the seed entirely within your own control.
But there is another advantage, of which our experience enables us to speak, that of harrowing the ground in the spring as early as the condition of the soil will allow. We have great reason to be satisfied for several years with decided advantage, not only because of the benefit which the growing wheat derives from it, but of the admirable condition in which it puts the ground for the reception of the clover-seed which is usually sowed at this period.
If the ground be harrowed, the clover-seed is then sowed, and a roller of considerable weight passed over the whole, it will be an extraordinary and unfavorable season if your stubble after harvest be not well set with clover.

But I must not drop the subject, even at the risk of being tedious, without some remark upon the subject of the four-cornered harrow, which is common use and which is a very inefficient implement for this, as it is for all other purposes.
This harrow which we use, is composed of two parts, being connected in the middle by hinges, so that it may conform more perfectly to the inequalities of the ground, and having in each part sixteen teeth of the usual length and seven-eighths of an inch square. It will be found that in the operation of harrowing wheat, the common harrow will do very little work, it will be required to go over the ground more than once to put it in the condition that a single stroke with a good implement will attain.
If a harrow-tooth be properly made, by hammering it and a quarter square iron, without intense heating, down to seven-eighths of an inch square, for more durable, and of course you multiply the number, much more efficient than the large alumny one which has had no other work upon it than that which was necessary to draw it to a pointing which heat. There need be no fear of disturbing the roots of the wheat by this operation. You use a heavy, sharp harrow with thirty-two teeth, which produces no other effect than that which is entirely beneficial.

STR THE SOIL.—Somebody has said,
"The more we sow,"
"The more we grow."
A volume of truth in a few words. If cultivators of the soil appreciated as they should the advantages of stirring the soil frequently and well, sensations of drought would neither be so much dreaded or felt, as they now are.—Penn'a Farm Jour.

TO FARMERS.—Whoever will apply an ounce of gunpowder, brimstone, and common grease behind the necks of their lambs, will be sure of having them preserved from all kinds of vermin.
It is not only necessary to be made use of is so small, that a few pennies worth is sufficient to dress upwards of 200 lambs.

To double the crops on most farms; about all it is necessary is for our agriculturists to sell off one half of their land, and with the proceeds buy manure for the other. The larger the farm, the less a man grows to the acre.

The man who leaves half an hour daily going for or hunting displaced tools, loses 100 hours a year.

To preserve Milk, put a spoonful of horse-radish into a pan of milk, and it will remain sweet for several days.
