

Santa Anna's Address to his Compatriots.
Santa Anna arrived at Vera Cruz on the 1st inst. and was received with great solemnity. On the following (the 2d) Gen. Santa Anna published a manifesto to the nation, of which we subjoin a translation.

General Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna to his Compatriots.
MEXICANS—On placing my foot on the shores of my country, I salute them with the liveliest emotions. My heart has palpitated with tenderness from the time when my eyes commenced to discover around our coast's lofty mountains which indicate the proximity of a land in which everything is dear to my heart, in which everything brings me to the nearest remembrance.

You have called me, believing me useful to save you from the state of anarchy and superstition into which you have fallen, and I have not delayed in responding to your summons. You already have me on your soil, resolved to employ all my energies in an object of such capital importance. But if I have been quick to come at your call, it is from reasoning upon your efficacious operation. Of no use will be my firm resolution to consecrate myself entirely to the salvation of the country if every effort you do not assist me, co-operating with all his ability to the attainment of these ends.

Far from me is the thought of avenging ancient grievances. Those who have been my enemies may continue all their enmity; but I shall not be touching the shores of my country, I present to all the hand of friendship. Neither do I come to make any party prevail. I come only to raise the sacred standard of union, summoning to follow it all Mexicans, whatever may be their opinions. Every man whose heart swells and is moved at the voice of his country, he is my friend, he is my companion.

Mexicans, too long have we permitted ourselves to be deceived by chimerical ideas. We have lost too much time in fruitless discussions. A real and ready has come to drag us from such a deplorable deception. To what have we arrived at the end of thirty years of independence? Cast an eye over the map of your country, and you will find that a great portion of your territory has been lost. Examine the state of your finances, and you will find that they are in order, but that you are in debt to foreign nations? What is that army in whose lines I have had the honor to serve, that army which gained your independence, in which I glory of having had no small part—that army which I led through the desert conquering difficulties, which appeared insurmountable to the frontier of the republic—what has it repelled an imperial invasion, and with which I fought—with little fortune, but not without honor—when your capital was occupied by the enemy?

Mexicans, let us become ourselves again. Let us improve the hard lessons of experience. Let us repair the errors we have committed. Here you have me to contribute my share to the honorable reparation. To all who are in good faith in the glorious work, and we may still have a country, national honor, and a name which we will not be ashamed to own.

Soldiers! comrades in arms! Behold anew at your head your old general, him who has conducted you some times with glory, him who has not abandoned you in the moment of misfortune; him who bears on his body an honorable mutilation, and who, with you, has exposed his breast to the balls of the enemy in the days of your fortune. Listen to a voice which is not unknown to you. Follow your general and friend; let us restore to our noble profession the lustre of which it has been deprived; and although the relations of friendship exist with all nations, and which I will not neglect, I may not at present make your gallantry necessary; let us be ready should national honor require it, to prove in the face of all the world what the Mexican soldiers have always sheltered in their breasts.

Mexicans of all classes. Let the day of my return to the country be the day of general reconciliation, and let the joy which it causes me to find myself among you exhibit itself in all assembled around the national standard and let us hear all about with the same union and enthusiasm as in 1821. Free the patria, free the independence. (Long live the country, long live independence.) These are the wishes with which I present myself at your call: these the vows of your patriot and friend.

Heroical Valor of Santa Anna.
Santa Anna proceeded to the city of Mexico on the 6th, having been elected as President of the Republic for the fifth time, by the votes of eighteen out of twenty-three States and territories.

An Indiana paper publishes an account of a queer hole on a side hill out there. The bank caved in like many other Indian banks, and left the hole sticking out about ten feet.
