

PARROT TALK.

The bad Latin and French displayed in Congress, has passed into a proverb, and many a man who might have held a respectable position in the House of Representatives and Senate, has been ruined by the display of his proficiency in the language of the parrot.

Mr. William Halstead, of New Jersey, who, at one time represented his native State in the American House of Representatives, and who, everybody will admit, is a man of ability, who might acquire eminence in any deliberative assembly in the world, comparatively fell from a really respectable position as a statesman, by interlarding his "first great speech," with Latin enough to fill a good sized common-law dictionary.

One of the purest writers of the country, who, as an editor, met with the respect of the press at large, held a most enviable position as a literary man, not only in England, but in the United States, and who, in the English language was the only one that employed; and that it was capable of subserving all the practical purposes of editorial duty, he aimed at, and achieved, in the "Littell's Living Age," a French editor, obtained a good degree of the confidence he achieved, by the simplicity and purity of his English.

A "Little Learning."

A writer in Harper's Magazine says Mr. CLAY related the following anecdote in a speech at Syracuse, New York, many years ago: "While I was abroad," says he, "laboring to arrange the terms of the Treaty of Ghent, I received a report of the negotiation of letters relative thereto, and several quotations from my remarks of letters touching certain stipulations in the treaty reached Kentucky, and were read by my constituents.

QUANDARIES.—Knocking at the wrong door, and hesitating whether you will run away and say nothing about it, or stay and apologize, crossing the road until you perceive a gig coming, and discovering you are in the wrong, or moving on you are sure to be knocked down by one, and if you stand still you may possibly be crushed by both.

THE MARRIAGE STATE;

Most startling considerations! Reflections on the Thoughtful. Strange that countless human beings exist and die through life as do the beasts of the field, or prey such creatures as the eagle, hawk, or falcon, or that they should be so ignorant of their own condition, and that they should be so ignorant of the happiness of a combining and affectionate wife, with plenty of children.
