Letter from Senator Douglas

The Washington Sentinel publishes a letter from Senator Douglas, occupying eight columns, in reply to the resolutions of the meeting of twenty-five clergymen at Chicago, and defending the course pursued by him in the debate in the Senate upon the protest from the clergymen in New England...

He contends that the principle in the Nebraska bill is identical with that contended for in the resolution, involving only the right of the people in the State to frame their own government, and that the transfer of slaves from Kentucky to Nebraska would be a benefit to the slaves, and not simply reducing the number of slaves in one State while increasing the number in another...

The severer right of the people to manage their own affairs in conformity with the constitution of their own country, and the right of the people to the resolution of the meeting of twenty-five clergymen at Chicago, and defending the course pursued by him in the debate in the Senate upon the protest from the clergymen in New England...
