From the Philadelphia Sunday Mercury. THE IRISH OXEN.

Some years ago, before the improvements in agricultural mechanics, and all their concomitant labor-saving practicalisms had vanished the use of goodj old fashioned ox-teams from the service of the farmers around Philadelphia, an anusing incident occurred between a farmer, his man, and a yoke of oxen.

Dennis O'Douncell, who, as his name would be the actual ways and the services of the natural ways.

imply, was a pure specimen of the natural productions of Old Erin. However wild an Irishman he might have been on his arrival here, he man he might have been on his arrival here, he was gultless of one crime, and that was murdering the King's English; for when he landed at the foot of Walnut street, not a word of it could he speak. But in pure Celtic, he was perfectly au fait. Soon after his arrival, he obtained, through the assistance of his acquaintances, employment upon the farm of a meek member of the Society of Friends, who resided below Darby. Under the kind tuition of Isaiah Moore, he soon learned a sufficiency of the language necessary to his intercourse with the peoguage necessary to his intercourse with the peo ple; but in all his relations with the animals or ple; but in all his relations with the animals on the farm, he clung to the "ould tongue." Now it happened that the first work Isaiah laid out for Dennis, was the breaking in of a pair of fine young steers, and under his management, they became quite a serviceable yoke of cattle. Hav-ing occasion to send to Philadelphia a load of duce, Dennis and the team of oxen were des produce, Dennis and the team of oxen were despatched to the city. After safely delivering his charge, Dennis embraced the opportunity thus afforded him, of calling to see some of his old country friends; and as he had not met them for a long time, the re-union was celebrated with a grateful supply of good old Irish whiskey; the quality whereof, being unexceptionable, quantity became a matter of no stire and with a grateful supply of good old Irish whiskey; the quality whereof, being unexceptionable, quantity became a matter of no stint, and Denois yielded himself to its influence, prolonging his stay rather longer than the farmer thought necessary to the performance of the trip. Friend Moore's anxiety at length induced him to go in search of Dennis and his property.
So he mounted the stage, and proceeded towards Philadelphia. A short distance from the city, he perceived the oxen bringing home the driver
—for from certain gyrations of Dennis' head, it was evident that he had enough to do to take care of himself. Now the Quaker being a practical Maine Law man, jumped into the wagon with as great a show of wrath as his religious tenets permitted him to expibit, and commencel gendling Dennis fraints. with as great a show of wrath as his religious tenets permitted him to exhibit, and commenced scolding Dennis furiously for getting drunk. He continued a heated and excited temperance lecture until they reached a bridge over a small stream below the Bell Tavern. Here the road forked—one branch of it leading across the bridge, and the other down by the side of it, to bridge, and the other down by the side of it, to the water. The latter was usually pursued when travellers desired to water their animals. And down this road went the oxen, as usual, to take a drink. While they were quenching their thirst, the farmer (as if exultrated by the sight of the water,) re-commenced his lecture to De nis; who, now recovering somewhat from his nis; who, now recovering somewhat from his stupper, was ill-disposed to put up with so much rebuke for what he considered a very trivial offence. In a fit of anger, he sprang from the wagon, and waded to the shore, at the same time telling Friend Moore, that "if he didn't like it he might drive his oven himself." Nothing loath to get rid, so easily, of a carcless man, Isaiah took him at his word, and tried to start the team but to his extenithment themself. Isain took him at his word, and tried to start the team, but to his astonishment, the oxen were quite regardless of all his efforts to drive them on. In vain he "woo havred" and "grad," and used the goad and tried every experiment in the art of driving, but not a foot would they remove from the spot where Dennis had left them and him. What was he to do? To leave them was not to be thought of: and if he would he must wade up to his middle through the cold water. His efforts soon collected a crowd about him—some of whom essayed to help him but him—some of whom essayed to help him, but with the same success. At last, one of the crowd suggested that he had better send after crowd suggested that he had better send after his man, and accordingly a messenger overtook Dennis, and endeavored to reason with him, arguing that if he wanted to leave his employer, he ought to take his oxen home for him, seeing that he could not do it himself; that it was unmanly to leave him in such a fix. Having touched the proper chord in Dennis' heart, he brought him back to the scene of the poor Quaker's tribulation. As soon as they had reached the bridge, Dennis spoke to the oxen in good Irish, which seemed perfectly intelligible to them, for away they started, at a speed very indecent for a pair of soher cattle, and never halted until they reached home. Dennis did not return to the Quaker—and as all efforts to teach the oxen English were fruitless, they became quite usekess as beasts of burden, and were sold to the butchers. Frend Isaiah made a solemn vow. (or some Quaker objurgation.) i solemn vow. (or some Quaker objurgation.) hat he would never again employ an Irishman to break oxen. A Temperance Story.

One evoning last week we took our scat at the supper table of a Cincinnat; and Louisville packet. Supper and conversation had progressed sometime before we were scated. An animated discourse was going on between an exceedingly sober-faced, ministerial looking old man, and a becurled and thin-faced lady, of not less than thirty, on the subject of temperance.

"Oh!" exclaimed she, with horror on her thin line, "I do denote the whiskey delicate."

lips, "I do despise the whiskey drinker."

The gentleman dropped his knife and fork, and seizing the lady's hand with enthusiasm and giving to drop from his twinkling eyes.

ing to drop from his twinkling cyes.

"Madam," said he, "I respect your sentiment and the-heart that dictated it. I permit no person however to go beyond me in despising the whiskey drinker. I have been disgusted on this very boat, and I say it before our worthy captain's face. What, I ask you, can be more disgusting than to see well dressed, respectable, aye, virtuous young men, whose mothers are now praying that the tender instructions by which their youth were illuminated, may bring forth preclous fruits in their maturity—I say to see such young men step up to the bar of this boat and without the fear of observing eyes, or the condemnation of enlightened opinion, brazenly ask for old Borbon, Rye, or Monongahela whiskey, when in that bar they know there is the very best old cogniac brandy."

ay, when in that par they know the constant part old cogniac brandy."

CHINESE GYPSIES.—Not far from here, there is at present a camp of Chinese Gypsies. These outcasts had little in common with the Gypsies of Europe and the East. They are of pure Mongolian blood, and only resemble the former in their wandering habits, their distinct social government, and their mendicity, which constitutes, in fact, almost their only means of support. Their degradation is almost without parallel, and I doubt if there be anything in human nature more loathsome than their appearance. Here they are, on this bleak hillock, overwhich a few stinted cedar are scattered. Their lairs—for they cannot be called tents—of filthy matting, are not more than four feet high, and harely large enough to contain two persons.—They are built upon the cold, wet earth, with perhaps a little straw to protect the bodies of the inmates. Two or three stones and a heap of ashes, in the side of the hill, are alf their domestle appliances. As we approach, a which long, tangled hair, and deep set, glaring black eyes, is thrust out from each of the lairs. Some lie still, morely following us with their gazo, like a heast surprised in his den; others crawl out, displaying garments that are dropping to pieces with sheer rottenness, and figures so frightfully republive and disgusting, that we move away, reponting to have disturbed this nost of human vermin.—Bayard Taylor's letter to the New York Tribune.

Revenue of Coal Estates. Comparatively few of our city readers have an adequate conception of the magnitude and rea value of the coal estates of the three great an thracite regions. In Schuylkill county, where operations have been carried on more extensive ly, and for a longer period than elsewhere, the revenue derived is truly astonishing. From a single tract of two hundred acres, in that county the income, since 1821, we have been informed. single tract of two hundred acres, in that county, the income, since 1888, we have been informed, has averaged $18,000 per annum. This is but one of many cases that have come to our knowledge. There are, indeed, other estates taht yield even more abundantly.

In the Luzerne region, the profits that attend mining corrections.

In the Luzerne region, the profits that attend mining operations are equally remarkable.—
The Baltimore company, located two miles from Wilkesbarre, cleared last season $60,000. Their investments in land and machinery have been but $180,000—which, therefore, is returned to the stockholders every two or three years. The Pennsylvania coal company, in the same region, though laboring under great disadvantages in the shipment of coal, netted the same year $330,000. The coal department of the Scranton company, also, during the same time, cleared a profit of $76,000 upon but 100,000 tons mined, although most of their large expenditures for development were increased during this period.

this period.

If these facts establish anything, they show clearly that available anthracite coal lands are among the safest and most remunerative investments, and that they are not estimated "at a fittle of their positive or productive value."—

New Uses of Spiritualism.—A woman was before one of the police Magistrates of New York last week for having three more living husbands than the law in that State allowed, though out beyond the Rocky Mountains, among the salacious polygamists of Utah, that would have been ne offence. The chief interest connected with the case arose from the manner the woman obtained her last husband, and the proof it affords of the miserable imposition practiced under the name of spiritualism. The woman was a prominent member of a "circle," and having been smitten with the likely looks of a young man, a believer in the "science," set about the work of inducing him to marry her. He heard that she had former husbands, and wished to know if they were dead. At the next meeting she summoned the whole of them from the land of shadows, and made them all, one after the other, testify to the fact that they were dead, (in the body,) and give other interesting items as to their spiritual condition. The young man could not, of course, deny such evidence; and being attracted by the smartness, intelligence, and good looks of the "medium" he married her. Not long after he discovered that her four husbands were living, and that one of them was black, a fact the spirit had forgotten to mention. NEW USES OF SPIRITUALISM .- A WOMAN WAS

THE MARRIAGE STATE: Shall Happiness and Health, or Misery and Sickness, allend it?

MOST STARTLING CONSIDERATIONS!

Reflections for the Thoughtful.

Strange that countless human beings exist and drag through life as do the beasts of the field, or the insects of the earth, evincing no more thought or reflection than though the noble faculties of mind were not vouchsafed to them.

Many such are husbands and fathers, upon whom are dependent the health, the well-being, and the happiness of a confiding and affectionate wife, with perhaps a family of children.

HOW OFTEN IT HAPPENS THAT THE WIFE LINGERS FROM YEAR TO YEAR WIFE LINGERS FROM YEAR TO YEAR
In that pittable condition as not even for one day to or even to her room; as hor pride, ambitton and energy induce and nerve her to the personal charge of hor household, even when her health will not admit of it; but she is nevertheless preceptibly sinking from day to day, and always ailing Thus, day after day, and most hafter month transpire. Her health daily sinks, till finally even the

THE BLOOMING BRIDE. 3ut a few years ago in the flush of health and routh, and buoyaney of spirits, rapidly, and apparently inexplicitly, becomes a feeble, stelky, debilitated wife, with frame emeciated, nerves strung, spirits depressed, countenance bearing the superses of suffering, and an utter physical and mountal measuration.

impress of soutering, and an utter physical and sential prostration.

Sometimes this deplorable change may and does arise from organic or constitutional causes. But oftener, by far oftener, to gross and inexensable ignorance of the simplest and plainest rules of bealth as connected with the marriage state, the violation of which entails disease, suffering and misbry, not only to the wife, but often

And must this continue? Shall we be wise in all that concerns the eattle of our fields, our borses, our sheep, our cows, our oxen, the nature and character of the soil we possess, the texture and quality of our goods and merchandles; but in all that concerns ourselves as human beings, with human functions and passions, subject to great derangoment, involving our future pence and happinessin all that concerns the health and wolfare of the wile of our affections, and the mother of our children; in all that concerns the mental and physical well being of those children, we should be immerced in the duringt and most

BENIGHTED IGNORANCE, BENIGHTED IGNORANCE,

AS CULPABLE AS INEXCUSABLE!

How long shall this ignorance prevail so productive of its bitter fruits? How long shall the wife and mother be ignorant of the nature, character and causes of the various womb and sexual complaints, embittering her days by suffering—suffering often prolonged to years, eventuating in a complication of diseases utterly and hopelessly incurable? Shall we for ever gloss our eyes to the results of physical policies is ediced by which we may arrive at an analerstanding of ourselves as men and women, subject to serious life-long enduring diseases, and perpetuating them to our children.
