A GOOD ANECOUTE.—Mr. Rives, editor of the Daily Globe, Washington, in reply to a cor-respondent, tells the following story : "We are admonished not to be prolix in an-swering our correspondent, from the fact that this day one week, we published in the Globe an answer of eight columns, which was not at all an answer, to an attack made on our 'home-stead' before the Scante, which answer was not generally read, because it was too long. We engaged a Senator, who is a lawyer, to read it, without thinking of his profession. Last Fri-day he called at Jackson Hall, in our absence, the see us, and left word that he would call next day. Thinking that he had read 'our poor re-marks,' as modest men generally characterize their speeches, and that they had convinced him of the justice of our cause, we took care to be at home on Saturday. At one o'clock, P. M., of that day he called and said, 'I have read the remarks in your case which you handed me, clean through's but have been unable to com-prehend them. I charge you fifty dollars for my services, which is the lowest rate I have ourderstands ems and ens, to aid me in the case.' We asked him if he would not make some abatement if we would read an equal qauntity of his professe, and he replied in sub-stance that he could not, as that would do him no good, as they were not made to convince anybody here, but for the purpose of keeping
