of propriety; and I am not without the hope, that my reasons for declining will be entirely satisfactory.

When you speak of a law to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquors, I take it for granted you do not mean so senseless a thing as a mere naked prohibition, without affixing a penalty, or providing the means for its execution. The law passed in Maine is the model, on which the other States have generally framed theirs. I believe the one proposed at the last session of our Legislature was almost a literal copy of the Maine law. Its constitutionality did not seem to be doubted by any of its numerous and able advocates. But it was violently opposed, on constitutional grounds, by others, who are as intelligent and conscientious men as any I know in the Commonwealth. In some of the States, the power to pass it was not challenged. In New York, on the other hand, the Governor declared it to be wholly inconsistent with the principles of a free government, and for that reason refused it his signature. Such, also, was the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts; and the highest tribunal in Michigan, composed of eight judges, stands at this moment equally divided. You, probadly, think it quite clear. But you must not forget that there are others who think it equally clear against you. It is, at least, doubtful enough to have produced conflicts and lawyers, as among the masses of the people. It is, moreamong statesmen, judges and lawyers, as among the masses of the people. It is, more-over, a question of great magnitude. Every-thing is important which touches the Constitution. A judge never acts under responsibilities so high as whon he deals with the great charter by which a free State holds its liberties; and, if any part of the Constitution is more sacred than another, it is that which marks the boun-

Courts would ecase to be "places where justice is Judiciously administered," and however in the work of the greatest states are more ministerial organism for registering the foregond decrees of conventions and other public assemblies. What, then, would become on the weak and the unpopular, for whose protect and the Constitution was amended, so as to give the election of Judges to the people, it was feared by many, that candidates would seall their integrity for votes, and conciliate one portion of the people by promises inconsistent with the just rights of others. I am glad to say, that the letter of your committee was to first demand over made upon me for a pledge of any kind—the first question that was over asked me concerning any matter which I might be called on to deelde. Up to the time when I received that tetter, no member of either convention by which I was nominated, nor no private citzen of my own political party, or any other, over him ted a desire to bind me by a promise in advance of his vote. I feel warranted in saying that this is the experience of all my brotherm; and I do not doubt that the candidates who opposed us, including the honorable and talented gendleman who is my present compotitor, have been treated with equal forbearance.

On Sundays we have religious exercises conducted by the chaplain of the army, Mr. Ker. This gentleman also teaches a school on week days. We have a store which is well patronized, and a bakery. If any thing is required which our market does not furnish, we have only to send to the city of Weston, three miles distant, and it is forthcoming.

Where is Mr. Pollock?

Where is Mr. Pollock?

The people, all over the State, says the Reading Gazette, want to know what has become of James Pollock? Only a few months ago, all the Whig, Abolition and Know-Nothing papers in the Commonwealth, announced with a trempedous flourish of trumpets, that he was about starting out on a tour through the State, and would "take the stump" in every county, for the purpose of enlightening the people on public affirst. The same papers were careful to tell fus, that, among a great many subjects in general, which Mr. Pollock would discuss, with his well-known cloquence, he would, in particular, so ligh as whon he deals with the great charter by which a free State holds its liberties; and, if any part of the Constitution is more secred than another, it is that which marks the boundaries between legislative authority and the reserved rights of the people. Besides, the law on which you ask my opinion is one which will directly affect the character, morals, property and business of the whole population of the Commonwealth.

Hore, then, is a much debated and vexed quositon of constitutional law—important in every aspect—which must come before the Supreme Court for final adjudication, and I, a candidate for a seal in that Court, am asked to determine it in advance, without notice to the parties interested; without hearing the argument on either side; without hearing the argument on either side; without even seeing the law; without having any one of the materials from which a judgement ought to be made up. If I would do this thing, I would render myself utterly unvertity of your confidence.

If the precedent set by you were submitted to, and generally followed, it is easy to see that many disasterous evils would rush into the State by that example. The success of all political parties may depend sometimes on judical decisions. Religious sects, corporations, and other large bodies of men, are often suitors in Court. All these have an equal reason to expect pledges. Interested individuals also stand on the same platform. Shall candidates for judiciously administered," and become a hore ministerial organism for registering the neuron minist us to reply in the manner expected. At all events, I have faith enough in this republicant system of ours to believe, that no State Convention ever did, or ever will assemble, in which a majority of members can be found, who will deliberately insist upon their right to demand helders of judicial candidates on question of law. I am, with great respect, yours, &c., I.S. BLAGE.

The Philadelphia News and other whig journals, confounded at the disclosures in relation to Pollock's connection with the secret order of Row-nothings, insimuates that Henry S. Mott, the democratic candidate for canal commissioner is a member of the organization. Other papers for a member of the organization. Other papers for a member of the organization, of Baltimore, grandson of the Prince Jorone, has decided to accept betters of naturalization, and the grade of lieutenant in the Intelligent announcement that M. Bonaparte had resigned his rank as lieutonant in the United States army, and that the resignation had been saccepted by the War Department. The young gentleman's chances of preferment are, double loss, much greater in France than here.
