THE EMPEROR'S SPEECH.

He said he felt more gratitude than he could express, for the kindly reception he had expedienced since his arrival in this country, and towards her Majesty, the Queen of England, for mabiling him to pay a visit to this country under such favorable circumstances to both nations. Ho-felt the highest pleasure in receiving from such a body as the Lord Mayor and Corporation of the City of London—a city which possessed all the necessary resources, either for peace or war. Flattering as were the sentiments which had been expressed, he received them cordially, because he knew they were addressed, not so much to himself personally, as to the French nation, of which he was on that occasion the interpreter. The interests of the two countries were identical. Those remarks had been addressed to an army and navy engaged in an united companionship of danger and gallantry—addressed to governments, both of whom, he trusted, were based on truth, moderation and justice. (Loud cheers.) For himself, he had dressed to an army and navy engaged in an united companionship of danger and gallantry-addressed to governments, both of whom, he trusted, were based on truth, moderation and justice. (Loud cheers.) For himself, he had never disguised the sentiments he felt towards England and the English people; and since he had never on the throne of France he had never changed those opinions, which while he was an oxile, he had always avowed. (Loud apphase) He believed, moreover, that these sentiments were inc omplete accordance with those which were held by the nation which had chosen him as its ruler. Indeed England and France were united on all the great questions of politics and human progress which at present agitated the world, from the shores of the Atlantic to the Wediterranean and Black Sea, and to the Baltic, they had at heart one cause, and had determined on pursuing one end. (Lond cheers.) It was by no plitful rivalries that the union of the von atlons could be discovered; and while they followed the dictates of common sense, they would be sure of the future. (Cheers.) It could not be sure of the future. (Cheers.) It was by no political rivalries that the union of the wor, then the war should be pursuing that his presence amongs, they would be sure of the future. (Loud cheers.)

After the leteresting ceremony of presenting the addresses, the august visitors adjourned to the refreshment rooms, to partake of some slight refreshment.

Some of the Beauties.

A New Orleans correspondent of the New York Herald, writing under date of the 6th ult., 8ays:

"John Dunn, a native of Chester county, Pa., aged about 36 years, whilst in the quiet discharge of his duties as a police officer of this tity, was most foully murdered on the evening of the 27th ult., at the corner of Union and Phillipa streets, in this city, by a band of dest peradoes, headed by one Victor Duprat. It seems from the evidence before the Coroner's Jury, and at the examination before the Recorder, that James Costello, George Watson Dan Wilson, — Barton, and several of the streets, finally reached the beat of officer Dunn, who becoming unusually boisterous, that officer requested them 'not to make so much noise."

Instantly the cry of 'kill him! kill the d—d Irish son of a b—h,' arose from their ranks, and the rufflans rushed upon the officer. Wilson and Watson dealing him several blows on the head with slung shots, and Costello stabbing him with a knife in several parts of the body. The Police coming to the rescue, are tested several of the murderers. Dunn was borne to the Circus street Infirmary, where he died the next morning at 2 o'clock. He was defisious to the last, made a dying confession, and bade his wife and three children adieu.—

the following confident language:

"The victory is already as good as won. The intelligence which unceasingly pours in upon us from every part of the State admits not of a doubt of an overwhelming majority for our tick.

There is not a county in which there is not a good spirit prevailing in our party, and a resolute purpose to crush the infatuated order whose triumph would accomplish results which even the sagacity of Patrick Henry never foresaw.—
The 24th of May will be a proud day for Virginia—one which inture generations of her sons

The new British loan of sixteen millions sterling has been taken by the Rothschilds. It is to terminate at the end of thirty years. Bulgiand assents to Louis Napoleon's taking command of the allied army in the Crimea.—This is, however, regarded as doubtful.

The Emperor and Empress of France had arrived in England, and were received with great demonstrations of respect by her Majesty, the Philadelphia.—1y

A worthy and estimable citizen. After outlying the companions of his early life, he is himself now numbered with the dead.
