THE CARE OF THE EYES.

Until one begins to feel the effect of impaired vision, he can hardly estimate the value of eyesight, and consequently, from ignorance or carelessness, he is apt to neglect a few simple precautions, by the observance of which his sight might be preserved. We are aware that the columns of a newspaper do not afford the space, nor is an editor qualified to treat scientifically of the injuries which accrue to the organs of vision; but certainly the knights of the concernment to have some practical experigans of vision; but certainty the some sanctum ought to have some practical experience upon artificial light, more of which they consume than falls to the lot of other men.

Let us then give our readers a few hints upon the preservation of sight, which we deduce from our own experience, and if we are incorrect, our medical friends, and especially opticians, are welcome to our columns, to correct our errors. We are not about to interfere with those we have resorted to spectacles, for the optician alone can benefit them, but there are multitudes who, perhaps, ought to wear spectacles, but will not, either from their incorrenience, or from an idea that they thereby confess that time has taken too strong a hold upon them.—Such ask, whether they can see better than they now do without the use of glasses? To the most of these we answer yes—provided you will Such ask, whether they can see better than they now do without the use of glasses? To the most of these we answer yes—provided you will follow these simple directions. First, never use your writing desk or table with your face towards a window. In such a case the rays of light come directly upon the pupil of the eye, and causing an unnatural and forced contraction thereof, soon permanently injuring the sight. Next, when your table or desk is near a window, sit so that your face turns from, not towards the window, while writing. If your face towards the window, while writing. If your face is towards the window, the oblique rays strike the eye and injure it nearly as much as the direct rays when you sit in front of the window. It is best always to sit or stand while reading or writing, with the window behind you; and next to that, with the light coming over you left side; then the light illumines the paper or book, and does not shine abruptly upon the eye-bill.

The same remarks are applicable to artificial light. We are often asked what is the best light; gas candles, oil or camphine. Our answer light; gas candles, oil or camphine. Our answer is, it is immaterial which, provided the light of either be strong and do not flicker. A gas-fishtail-burner should never he used for reading or fail-burner should never he used for reading or writing, because there is a constant oscillator fleekering of the flame. Candles, unless they have self-constuning wicks which do not require sauding, should not be used. We need scarcely say that oil wicks which crust over and thus diminish the light, are good for nothing—and the same is true of compounds of the nature of camphine; unless the wicks are properly trimmed of all their gunary deposit after standing twenty-four hours.

Itinimen of an unit guinary depose traces seem ing twenty-four hours.

But whatever the artificial light used, let it strike the paper or book which you are using, whenever you can, from over the left shoulder. Phis can always be done with gas, for that light testing enough, and so is the light from camphine oil, ke, provided it comes through a circular but or like the argand. But the light, whatever it be, should always be protected from the art in the ream by a glass channey as
