Where cannot be fluich sympathy for Baruum.
Whoever has read his biography, from his own ben, must be satisfied that his moral principles were nover strongly developed. His book, which homanaged to sail in various countries of the globe, has disgraced the Americanname. It is nothing but a history of the art of me. It is nothing but a history of the art of titing money under false pretences; and the thor, in a moral point of view, is no better an thousands who have suffered the penalties the laws for such practices. The world is always better off without such geniuses as Barm. No one pretends that he ever possessed ent in any honorable and dignified employent. He is a mere canning showman, who und selze upon other men's ideas and apply on to the art of money making without propermiting allows the proper such that is a such as a point of two.

Show the how yoth live, and where you live, I where you get your means to live?" This so no of the questions put to Baruum during examination; and he replied to it by saying the lived in this city, in Eight street, and at boarders, an had no other means of suptice except some meat given to him by his in-law, in Chadionati, and some tegatables ich gröv on his farm last year. He said he is gold watch, and a bredst-pit, worth some rof five himdred dollars, which he would dite, if required to do so. He also dashalemiarked that he had two suits of clothes ttwenty five dollars in mothey.

Moreoficiated in the been full interest of pretty pictures, or of those whom the pictures represent. Moreoficiated in the been full and complete, there having beed ongaged. In the ostablishment in which she was, the best attlistic talent in the city in all branches of photography; and the gentlemanly proprieter and operators spared no pains to give her an intelligent knowledge of the art. She therefore feels confident of being able to perform all she promises, when that promise is, to furnish as good ambrotypes, as well as deguerreotypes, as can be produced clew here.

A word for ambrotypes: though there are still those who will prefer the deguerreotype, yet the ambrotype has several advantages over it; the ambrotype can be seen in any light, is not subject to change, dampness having no effect on it; in fact there is no way to destroy a real ambrotype when flushed, but by breaking the glass.

Persons are invited to examine specimens.
