Funeral.

These were the words of the minister, as he stood before the coffin, and the congregation listened with reverent attention.
The words were spoken in a low, but firm voice, and they fell upon the ears of the mourning family with a solemnity which was never to be forgotten.

Miscellaneous.

THE WIDOW'S BEAU.

When he had commenced in the next life the inhabitants of Harlem concerned to the services of God.
The widow had read the psalm, and repeated the first line of the opening of the book of Job. The eyes of the people were fixed upon him, for he was not only a pious man, but he was a fine looking man, and his face was as bright as the sun. The widow was very still—the only sounds that came from the balcony, golden air, which the Sabbath morning had breathed into the world.

What is He Worth?

It is an every day question, "What is he worth?" Yet how few ask it in the right spirit. For men have come to restrict the phrase to the amount of money that has been amassed, departing from the good old meaning, which implies rather the virtues one possesses.
"What is he worth?" should be the question now, for that is, "what is his worth," often expressed originally. Mere intellectual qualities, often mere constitutional energy, may lead to fortune, without either refinement or goodness, and frequently even because of the absence of either, or both. The possession of wealth is, therefore, no certain criterion of worth. It does not, indeed, prove a man no worse than to be inferior morally to his race in general; but neither is it a guarantee that he is better.
There have been virtuous men on thrones as well as in private life. There have been saints and martyrs among the poor, as well as higher stations. The various conditions of life bring different temptations, from which none are exempt. But each man has his own advantages, so that no man is justified in doing wrong, on the plea that his circumstances compelled it.

A DIBBE.

Then art gone in thy early sweetness,
The sun of thy life hath set,
But the glory that hung around thee, Bright and bright as the shadows Of the stars upon the sea, When they shine in their nightly splendor, Are the memories of thee.

Appearance of John Hancock.

One who saw John Hancock in June, 1782, relates that he had the appearance of advanced age. He had been recently and severely afflicted with gout, probably owing in part to the custom of drinking punch—a common practice in high circles in those days.
As recollected at this time, Hancock was nearly 60 years of age, and of a person stooping and apparently enfeebled by disease.
His manners were very gracious, of the old style, a dignified complaisance. His face had been very handsome. Dress was adapted quite as much to the occasion as useful. Hancock was more than a little stout, and commonly caps when at home. At this time, about 1782, Hancock was in a velvet cap, within which was one of fine linen. The latter was turned up over the lower edge of the velvet one.
He had a blue damask waistcoat, and a common lined with silk, a white stock, a white satin embroidered waistcoat, black satin small clothes, white silk stockings and red morocco slippers. It is a striking proof of the fashion of the time, that he had a pair of diamonds, which he wore in a ring, and which he placed in a pocket when the season required it. At this visit, Hancock took from the cooler standing on the hearth a full tumbler, and drank first himself and then offered it to the guest. His equipage was splendid, and such as is not customary at this day. His apparel was sumptuously embroidered with gold, silver, lace, and other decorations fashionable among men of fortune of that period.
He rode especially upon public occasions, with six beautiful bay horses, attended by servants in livery. He wore a scarlet coat, with ruffles on his sleeves, which soon became the prevailing fashion; and it is related of Dr. Nathan Jacques, the famous physician of Newbury, that he passed all the winter of that year in Boston in one day, to procure cloth for a coat like that of John Hancock, and returned with it under his arm, as a foot.

Getting up in the Morning.

The hour we get up in the morning very much depends on the hour we went to bed the night before. It is pretty evident that nature made a mistake when she calculated the sun's going down, or else some of the present generation are sadly in fault about retiring to rest, and no less so in regard to getting up. What a waste of beauty, what a waste of music, happiness and health to sleep out the morning hours! Reader, did you ever live in the country, and in the month of June get up about half-past three o'clock in the morning? There is no hour like that in the whole twenty-four hours, full of incense, full of music, full of light, full of inspiration. We should think, if angels ever came to earth, they would come then; and we fancy they do, for the air is full of fragrance, every grove has its orchestra, and such pieces as they play! Not an instrument is out of tune, not a note out of time. Such pieces! No Mozart, no Beethoven with play them!

Young Man You're Wanted.

A woman wants you. Don't forget her: No matter if you are poor, don't wait to be rich; if you do, ten to one if you are fit to be married. Marry while you're young and struggle to get on.

Who is a Gentleman?

A gentleman is not merely a person acquainted with certain forms of etiquette, fine and self-possessed in society, able to speak and act, and move in the world without awkwardness, and free from the vulgarities which are in bad taste. A gentleman is something beyond this; that which lies at the root of all good and refinement, and tact, and power of pleasing, is the same spirit which lies at the root of every virtue. It is the thought and feeling, in every doing, to think of others.
He is constantly thinking, not indeed how he

That's a Question of Your own Asking.

A knot of rustic wretches convened round them a bar-room of an American village terren. The blacksmith and barber, and constable and schoolmaster, all were there.
After they had guzzled and smoked to their heart's content, and when all the current topics of the day had been exhausted, the schoolmaster proposed a new kind of game to relieve the monotony of the evening.
Each one was to propound a puzzle to his neighbors, and whoever should ask a question of any kind, and not answer it, was to be punished for the whole.

...the first syllable of the second line was trembling upon his lips, when a rustle at the door announced the entrance of two persons, a lady and a gentleman, dressed in the latest fashion. The lady turned from the parlor door, and the gentleman watched with more than ordinary interest the progress of the couple. A most lady, who had the good, the eloquent, the handsome Mr. B. sought again to steal the attention of his hearers. And in spite of these distractions, hadn't she come out all dressed in white, and walked into the church in broad daylight, leaning on the arm of a young gentleman. She would have pleased all the eyes that were turned to her. She
