These dogs are said to resemble the wolf—the have long, pointed, projecting noses, sharp and upright ears, and long bushy tails; color various black, brown, reddish brown, white and spotted. They vary also in size; but a good sledge dog should not be less than two feet seven inches high. Their howling is that of a wolf. In the summer they dig holes in the ground for coolness, or lie in the water to escape the masquitees, which in those regions are not less troublesome than one of Pharaoh's plagues. In winter, they burrow in the snow, and "a curled up, with their noses covered by; their bushy tails. The preparation of these, animals for a journey is carefully to be attended to. For a fortnight, at least, they should be put on a small allowance of hard food, to convert their superfluous fat into firm flesho. They are also to be driven from ten to twenty miles daily; after which, Von Wrangel says, they have been known to travel a hundred miles a day without being injured by it.

We drove ours," he says, "sometimes at the rate of one hundred werst (sixty-six miles) a day. Their usual food is fresh fish, thawed and cut if pieces; and ten frezen herrings atte said to be a proper daily allowance for each dog. A team consists commonly of twelve dogs; and it is of importance that they should be accustomed to dray together. The foremost sledge has usually an additional dog; which has been trained as a leader. On the, segacity and docility of this leader depend, the quick and steady going of the team, as well as food as the safety of the traveller."—N. Y. Journal: of Commerce.
