A Thrilling Incident.

Returning from a visit to New Orleans, we MELUTINING From a visit to Now Orleans, wo line steamer with but few passengers. Among the laddes, one especially interested us. She was the widow of a wealthy planter, and was returning with one child to her father's house.—Her devotion to the child was very touching, and the eyes of her old black nurse would fill with tears as she besought her mistress "not to love that boy too much, or the Lord would take him away from her."

with tears as she besought her mistress snot to love that boy too much, or the Lord would take him away from her."

We passed through the canal at Louisville, and stopped for a few minutes at the wharf, when the nurse, wishing to see the city, walked out on the guard at the back of the boat, where by a andden effort the child sprung from her arms into the terrible current that swept towards the falls, and disappeared immediately. The confusion which ensued attracted the attention of a gentlemon who was sitting in the front part of the boat, quietly reading. Rising Instilly, he asked for some article the child land worn. The handed him a tiny apron she had torn off in her effort to retain the babe in her arms. Turning to a pslendid Newfoundland dog, that was eagerly watching his countenance, he pointed to the apron, and then to the spot where the child had gone under. In an instant the noble dog lepged into the rushing water, and he also soon disappeared. By this time the excitement was intense, and some persons on shore, supposing that the dog was lost as well as the child, procured a boat and started off in search of the body. Just at this moment the dog was seen far away with something in his mouth. Bravely he struggled with the waves but it was ovident that his strongth was fast failing; and more than one breast gave a sigh of rolief as the boat reached him, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was announced that he had the child, and it was accessed and kissed his shaggy head she looked up to his owner and said;

"Oh, sir, I must have this dog! I am rich; it also all I have—every thing—but give me my child's preserver."

The gentleman smiled, and natting his dog's head, said:

"I am very glad, madam, he has been of sorvice to you, but nothing in the world could induce me to part with him."

The dog looked as though he perfectly understood what they were talking about, and giving his sides a shake, laid himself down at his muster's feet with an expression in his large eyes that said plainer than words—"No, nothing shall part us."

Persian Character.

The Persians have been not inaptly called the The Persians have been not inaptly called the Frenchman of the East. Their olegant manners, their wit, their levity, their general skepticism, their taste, their love of display, their hospitality and their cookery, give them a claim to this title as compared with the surrounding Mohammedan nations. A Persian gentleman is naturally polished and refined. It would be difficult to exceed the grace of his demeanor and his courteous address. He is infinately acquainted with the literature of his country, and will embellish his conversation and his letters with ready and opposite quotations from the poets of his nation. He will be apparently generous and unselfish. His house and its conthe poets of his nation. He will be apparently generous and unsellish. His house and its contents are yours. He is your servant and your dearest friend. He shows none of that haughty condescention for the European which the best educated Turk can scarcely conceal. But habit and long misgovernment, the want of confidence in all around him, the fear of treachery, the constant example of deceit and falsehood before his eyes, have corrupted a character which has many noble qualities, and rendered him mean, trenberous, deceitful and cruel. Some of these vices, especially a want of truthfulness, to be attributed to similar causes, have extended even to the peasantry, otherwise, an honest, of these vices, especially awant of traininess, to be attributed to similar causes, have extended even to the peasantry, otherwise, an houset, kind hearted and enduring race.

The propensity to fulsehood has become so characteristic of the whole Persian people, that it is a proverb in the East. At first the traveller is exposed to continued difficulties and mortifications from not being fully aware of the extent to which the habit is carried; till at last he becomes so accustomed to it that, like a native of the county, he learns to believe exactly the contrary from that which he is told. For instance, if on a journey pour ask a peasant the name of a village on the right hand, he is certain to give you for it the name of that on the left. Unfortunately the habit is carried far he yout the common intercourse of life, and is so yond the common intercourse of life, and is so universal, and considered so little deserving of endation, that to call a Persian gentlen a liar to his face is no reflection whatever upo his character. This renders all diplomatic tercourse with the Court of Teheran and in Ministers of the Shah difficult and uncertain i its results.

The worst side of the character of the Persian is admirably described in that most amusing and witty of modern works of fiction "Inji Baha." We see him in all his weakness. "Haji Baba." We see him in all his weakness and his vices—a llar, a boaster and a coward—liberal in professions not meant to be realized—good tempered, fond of a joke—full of humor, and a capital boon companion, ready to discuss with you on a religious dogma, to get drunk upon flery raki, or to borrow your meney not to be repaid. Although the sketch is as faithful as can reasonably expected in a work of this nature, yet many of these views are the result of bad education, and of the low standard of morality which marks a debased social condition.—London Quarterly Review. dition .- London Quarterly Review.

Church Music in England.

The Rev. Dr. Tying, the rector of St. George's, New York, who is now travelling in Europe, gives the following account of choral service at St. Paul's in London, in contrast with the church music in America:

"The anthem," he says, "was exquisitely beautiful and effective. It was impossible to restrain the emotion which was produced. Never before did I hear such mission possible to restrain the emotion which was produced. Never before did I hear such mission music in America:

"But for sacred song, whether in solos or in chorases, the English are much beyond us or any nation as can be conceived. The afternoon service at St. Paul's was equally fine in the execution. There the anthem was the 16th Psaim, from the 7th verse. It was very animated and joyous. The verse, "Tell it out among the heathens," &c., was executed in a maderly style, and the rejoning of the fields and woods was highly dramatic, but the whole was effective as a religious instinument. It became and and to LAMES C. BOOTH. Analytic Chemist," and the rejoning of the fields and woods was highly dramatic, but the whole was effective as a religious instinument. It became and and of the balks. Amalytic Chemist." was highly dramatic, but the whole was effective as a religious matument. It became an and of united worship, by carrying on the mind and hoart of the congregation with it. Its influence was solemn, spiritual. A new exhibition of the choral service has been given to me, in the seriousness, propriety and effect of it, and while I do not wonder at the interest taken in it by the people, I am delighted at the seriousness with which it is received and performed."

DISTANCE OF THE SUN FROM THE EARTH. - The Distance of the Sun from the Earth.—The German journals have given some tables which prove that the distance between the certh and sun is increasing annually, and argue from it that the increasing hundily of our summers, and the loss of tertility by the earth, are to be attributed solely to this circumstance. No credit has heretofore been given to tradition of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese, accyrding to which, these people formerly said the sun's disk was almost four times as large as we now see it for they estimated the apparent dampier, of the sun-as double of what it is seen in ourlagy. If, however, we next attention to the confinied alsun as double of what it is seen in our day. If, however, we pay attention to the continued distinuition of the apparent diuncition of the apparent diuncition for the same according to the best observations for several centuries, we must suppose that the ancients were not mistaken in the estimates they have transmitted to us. In the course of six thousand years from the present time, they assume that the distance-will be so great that only an eighth part of the warmth we now enjoy from the sun will be communicated to the earth; and it will then be covered with cernal ice, in the same manner as we now see the plains of the north, where the elephat formerly lived, and have neither spring nor autumn.
