College Anecdote.

It was the custom at the College, where a certain gentleman attended, for the Professor to put to the class miscellaneous questions, which were expected to be answered off hand. On one of these occasions, the Professor turned to this gentleman and asked him the following: "To which, sir, does the united voice of all antiquity ascribe the seniority, poetry or

Gentlemen, the learned Professor asks me to which does the united voice of all antiquity ascribe the senority, poetry or prose? I would which it does ascribe the senority, and further-

The student took his seat amid, not the laughter, but the wild, denomical shrieks of the class? Even the sober Professor could not restrain himself. But discipline must be enforced, and our hero was summoned to appear be-fore the President. As he was not unused to summonses of that nature, he confronted the head of the faculty. This awful personage charged him with the crime of using profane language in the class, and asked him what he had to say for h mself. Jonathan Among the Spirits.

A cute old farmer of Columbia county, N. Y. called on a medium, and requested that his sis-ter might be allowed to occupy the body of a mesmerized medium on the platform for the purpose.
"Is the spirit of Mary Stokes present in the body of the medium," asked the operator.

'Yes.' was the answer. Mr. Jonathan Stokes was now informed that he might ask any question he pleased of the benefit of which information he availed himself immediately.

"Is that you, sister Mary?"

"Are you happy?"

"Supremely so."
"What sphere' are you in?" "I am in the tifth sphere."

"Ah. getten' pretty well up," said Jonathan in an undertone, as if speaking to himself. "Well Mary, is it true that there is a hell of fire and brimstone?'

The operator looked amazed. 'You see, old hoss," said Jonathan, "I jist dropped in to try your mediums, but friend," he continued turning to the audience, "it's all

He sent for their arms, and, after hesitating some time; these also were given up, with seven ele phants and lots of stores. On reaching the jail, Hodgson ordered the Princess out of the vehicle; they, imagining all, was not right for them-solves, began (native like) to talk, and say they hoped there might be an inquiry into their conduct. Hodgson said "cheeproks" (be quiet) and ordered them to take off all their fine clothes. When this was done, he said, " Now get in again," and ordered the driver to proceed. He then beckened to one of his men for a carbine, and with his own hand shot each and all the three princes. He then took their bodies into the city and laid them out for inspection in front of the Koasallie, where these wrotches had laid out their victims during the massacre.
