

LOVE'S LAST GRIEF.
BY FINLEY JOHNSON.
Now fare thee well, my own beloved,
Thou'rt stumpling on thy brook,
His hand is plucking from thy cheeks,
The blooming roses now:
Ah! bitter, bitter is the pang,
Dark fate has led thee to the grave,
To know that soon the grave will bid,
Thy loving form to me.
Ah! little thought this heart of mine,
In pleasure's golden hours,
That they so soon would fade away,
Like summer's fragile flowers,
And as I press thy velvet cheek,
And calmed thy loving fears,
I little thought that I so soon,
Should be in grief and tears.
But ah! too soon the spoiler came
And marked thee for his prey,
And when he touched his withering hand,
Soon faded to decay:
Thou wert too fair and beautiful,
Within this world to dwell,
And angels now have welcomed thee,
And thou art home to dwell.
O, when they told this thrilling heart,
That thou, alas! had died,
I cursed the cold formality
Which kept thee from my side.
But when I saw thy sweet wings,
And by thy bedside prayed,
And wept to think that they refused To let me give thee aid.
And as I stood convulsed in grief,
I wildly 'ere thee with my arms,
And prayed and wept, and wept and prayed,
Until my breath was spent;
And as I saw thee robed in white,
In awe I held my breath,
My God! My God! I would have died,
To see thee back from death.
But fare thee well, my own beloved,
I know that thou art best,
No earthly woe, no dream of pain,
Shall haunt thee after death.
Thou hast but fled to realms of bliss,
A mansion to prepare,
Where I shall join you, dearest one,
Thy endless joys to share.

Big Trees in California.
The Big Tree forest, says the Bulletin, a paper printed on the stump of the "big tree," is situated in a small valley surrounded by spurs of the Sierra Nevada, and is one of the most beautiful of the Calaveras river, 15 miles from Murphys, 25 from Mokelumne Hill, 80 from Stockton, 80 from Sacramento, 80 from Colusa, and 24 from Sonoma.
The grove and the trees were discovered early in 1850, by hunters, whose accounts were considered fabulous until confirmed by actual measurement.
Dr. Dowd, who present intrepid expression to Carson Valley, was among the first discoverers; he was at that time employed hunting game for the workmen of the Union Canal Company's works, which were in a course of construction.
Mr. Dowd had wounded a grizzly, and followed him until he passed between the two "guardians" (two trees) which were the entrance to the grove.) The immense size and height of these trees so surprised him that he lost sight of the grizzly, who made his escape into the dense undergrowth. After stopping a distance around the base of the trees, he cast his eye in a northerly direction and saw one yet larger, and whose base he stepped, and found it to be near one hundred feet in circumference. Having lost sight of the grizzly, he turned to the right, and when he related to his companions his discovery of the big trees. They inquired the story, marked attention, until the conclusion, when they were all excitedly exclaimed, "that's a lumberer's yarn—got a good thing on old Dowd now." One, more knowing than the balance, placed his thumb on his forefinger, and with a general air of knowledge, intimated that "you can't come it over me with your timber yarn; I'm told that in the Mississippi bottoms to believe any such story as that."
Dowd being rather sensitive, and not wishing his word doubted, said no more about his big trees for six months, when another party came to wander in the grove, and corroborate all of Dowd's statements.
The valley in which these trees are found contains about 100 acres of land, and is 6,000 feet above the sea level.
Over 100 trees of this species are now standing, and are found within an area of 60 acres of the valley. According to botanists, they belong to the family of the Leguminosae, and are justly named WASHINGTONIA, GLABERRIMA, and in such quantities that we can supply all who may favor us with their patronage. Carpenters, cabinetmakers, wagon and coachmakers, painters, millwrights, blacksmiths, and all others and the public generally, will find a full and complete assortment of goods to select from, at
