Courting.

This is rather a delicate subject, we know but then we dare say, a subject bearing this head will be read by the ladies as quickly as anything on which their eyes can rest. And it is for their benefit we are now writing. There is something in the idea of courting which causes an indescribable thrill. We have just read the following account of how the ladies do up things in Rome, which may offer some useful hints

"A Roman lady who takes a liking to a foreigner, does not cast her eyes down when he looks at her, but fixes them upon him long and locks at her, but fixes them upon him long and with evident pleasure; may, she gazes at him alone; whenever, she meets him in company, at will say, without ceremony, to a friend of the young man, " tell that gentleman I like him." It the man of her choice feels like sentiment, and asks, " are you fond of me?" she replies with the utmost frankness, " yes, my dear."

There, that is coming to the point at once, and not going about with blushes and simpering, and finally get out "no," when "yes" is intend-ed; "What is the use of making such a stamerng and stuttering about it when one is overjoydiwith pleasure ?

The ladies of Rome do not seem to be at all and modesty. The say what they think, and actaccordingly. On the contrary, our Ameri-can ladies are so modest and bashful, that they let all the good opportunities slip through their fingers while they are blushing behind a fan.— They would not for the world let a young man suppose they cared anything about him, though y might be dying with love. Now we think it is best to split the difference. The Roman ladies are rather too fast. Our, advice is, that you take for your "platform" the compromise and unite the two. Medium ground is generally safe. But don't forget that time is flying.

Modern Inventions.

The strongest witness the present age has to superiority over the past, is the number and quality of its inventions. The classic Greek, surrounded by musc-haunted groves and monuments of incomparable art, had not the simple converience of a cooking-stove; and the Inxurious Roman, lounging on the silks of Persia, amid marble baths and orange-scented villas, was compelled to burn a floating wick in an open msor of oil, to light and defile with smoke his splendid palaces. The spirit lamp, safety lamp, rotary stove, kitchen range, and ten thous und appliances that go to make up our labor-saving machine system, and in which there are mo sefulness and luxury than in all the purple of Tyre or gold of Ophir, the haughty conquerors of old knew nothing about. We may not have chisseled the marble equal to Phidias, nor touchcd the canvass so tonderly as Apelles; but we have moulded marble gravite into far more useful shapes for the time being, and turned our brushes to protect and beautify our houses as the ancients never thought. We may not have and work in our line at low rates and warranted. developed the arts so sublimely, but we have furned them to more universal, practical account. The mystery of Etruscan vases we unriddle in our commonest pottery, and the poorest farmer in the land has more means of domestic comfort and independence than a Greek philosopher or Roman senator enjoyed. It is hardly possible, in these days, to keep pace with useful and cunful are modern art and invention-framing iron horses for steam spirits, and cross-wiring the earth that man may send the lightning of heaven on his errands.-Blackwond.

PRIVACY.-It should be a rule between all friends to accept just so much of each other's confidence as is freely and voluntarily given.— Every person has a sacred and inaliena right vacy of thought and feeling-a right which to privacy of thought and teeling—a right which should be respected to the very letter, even by the most intimate and dearest friends. It is a common saying, and a very mischierous one, that there should be "no secrets between man and wife." A woman has just as much right to withhold a full expression of her innermost thoughts after marriage as before, and a man has, of course, the same. When all is laid bare -the holicst recesses of the heart-the very adyta of the soul's temple—the two will almost inevitably tire of each other. There is nothing new—they have told all they know, and nothing more can be said between them, except mere dominant between them, except mere commonplaces, which soon become ennyeux.— This right to privacy is not sufficiently well un-derstood in the world. Near friends are too apt to assume the power of prying into and cri-ticising each other's hearts. They should be more careful—more respectful—and ask fewer

REMINISCENCES OF JEFFERSON .- Mr. Randall gives a great many interesting anecdotes of M Jefferson in the "Life" which he has just cor leted, all of which are characteristic, and bring that great and good man's memory include be-fore the people of this country again. As a "timily man" he excelled, though that is not to be usually looked for in a man whose life is up to affairs of State; he interested himgiven up to attairs of State; no interested min-solf in little purchases for his daughters and grand-children, and probably made a facile a "shopping" man as any of the ladies who give their whole attention to that branch of business. The following reminiscence from one of Jefferson's grand-children is worth quoting again :

"To him (Jefferson) I owed all the small blessings and joyful surprises of my childish and girlish years. I was fond of riding, and was rising above that childish simplicity when, pro-vided I was mounted upon a horse, I cared noth-interest at the rate of five per cent, will be ising for equipments. I was beginning to be fastidious, but never told my wishes. I was stand-ing one bright day in the portico, when a man. rode up to the door with a beautiful lady's saddle and bridle before him. My heart bounded. My grandfuther came out of his room to tell mo they were mine. When about fifteen years old, paid to the collection of notes, drafts, checks, T began to think of a watch. One afternoon the &c., in any part of the United States or Cana-
