Mr. Wm. H. Day, a gentleman of color, applied to a steamboat office in Detroit for a ticket as cabin passenger. The agent rejected the application, but at the same time offered Mr. Day-who is so called, we presume, on the cus a non principle—accom nodations provided for persons of his complexion.

Mr. Day spurned the idea with indignation.

Had not the dominant party of Michigan taught him to regard himself as the equal of his white brethern? Had they not denounced and repudiated the Dred Scott decision, with its philosophy of negro subordination and Caucassian supremacy? Had they not, in theory at least, embraced the black man as an associate? Mr. Day recollected these Black Republican abstrac-

Accordingly the indignant Day instituted an action against the proprietor of the steamboat. The case went before the Circuit Court on a point of law, and, wonderful to say, the point of law was determined against the injured Ethiopian. Whereupon Mr. Day took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State, and the Supreme Court of the State unanimously decided that a person of Mr. Day's peculiar color has no right to travel in company with white men. It is a surprising result, but the reader will be still mere astonished when he is informed that cts; hhds. at 211 cts., and drudge at 201 c. the Court consisted exclusively of Black Repub-

In the case of Dred Scott, the Supreme Court of the United States merely decided that the nagro is not a citizen in contemplation of the Constitution, and that, consequently, he is excluded from the political rights of citizenship. We all remember with what an outburst of in-dignation this proposition was rejected by the Black Republican party. We remember, too, Black Republican party. We remember, 100, with what a vehement advocacy they asserted the perfect equality of the African race, in the face even of an adverse decision by the highest judicial tribunal in the country. The election is over, the Black Republicans have now no special need to patronize the negro; and being requested to apply their own doctrine in redress of a practical grievance, they quietly inform Cuffe that he belongs to a lower order of the animal creation, and must not presume to sit in the cabin of a steamboat with his white superiors. The judgment goes beyond the principle of the Dred Scott decision. It affirms the moral inferiority of the Black man, and denies him an equality of social privileges. It stigmatizes him as the pariah of the community, and interposes an inexorable resistence to his association with the dominant class of white. citizens. It is of a piece with the uniform conduct of the Abolitionists. These people fondly flatter the negro with abstractions of equality and fraternity; but in practice they never fail to treat him with contumely and aversion. They will allow him to vote as a make weight in the scale against the South, but they repel him from their bed and board with unufterable disdain. They are destitute of principle, inca-pable of an honest conviction, indifferent to the cencies of consistency: in short, are worthy of the contempt with which they are regarded by the country.
