PRENTICE SAYS OF AN EDITOR who said he "amelt a rat," that if he did, and the rat smelt him, the poor rat had the worst of it.

How do you do this morning, Mrs. Scramtum? "Oh, dear, Lord knows I'm feeble enough—I don't see many well moments in the course of a year..."

"O, you don't understand anything about it, child. It's the care, more than anything else, though, sakes alive, there's enough to do always, I hadn't ought to have anything else to trouble me, when I'm so feeble..."

"O, Doctor, dear, why I can't afford to have one all the time, it costs too much. And then, besides, I don't like anything that costs me, I'm most done with this world..."

"O, yes, I'm all run down. I've had the neuralgia, shlocking of late, in my head, face and neck. I've been almost crazy with it..."

"Why don't you ride out Mrs. Scramtum?" "O, it costs so much to hire a carriage, that I don't dare speak of it."

"I don't dare speak of it. And then, Mrs. Scramtum never thinks of any such thing. Her son's coming home, and she thinks that I'll never grow tired of staying in the house..."

"I would without the world, existence in it would soon become, through over-population, the most fearful of curses. To death we owe our life; the passing of one generation clears the way for another..."
