A DILEMNA FOR MODEST BEAUX .-- A contemporary relates the adventure of two young genes, who started in a buggy to visit two charming young ladies, a few miles from town ; seems that the young ladies referred to, were that evening expecting the arrival of a married sister, who was to bring a young infant with her, and as the two gentlemen reached the on. But the Convention has determined the house, about dark, the ladies seeing the buggy and two persons in it, supposed it of course to be the married sister, and both rushed out to the wagon, the foremost one screaming at the top of her voice, "Give me the baby, give me the baby." It is almost needless to say that the modest young men, not understanding the true state of affairs, wheeled their horse and struck for home in a hurry."
