WHY IS IT?

Why is it that the race of old bachelors and old maids is increasing at such a fearful ratio in our cities and large towns compared with the state of things as they existed thirty years ago? Answer: It is owing to the increased cost of living, and the fact that the ladies will not do their next toward making a living not do their part toward making a living. When a man marries, he must not only marry the lady he selects, but an Irish girl attached to wait upon her. Consequently no prudent man, unless he is rich, dare marry, marriage has become such an expensive luxury. Hence it is that so many follow the advice of St. Paul; "He who marries does well, he who does not does better."—The Magnolia.

After saying that St. Paul never meant to give any such general advice as is here attributed to him, we want to say that much of what is charged upon the ladies by the Magnolia, ought to be charged upon the men. I is true that most of our young ladies attend to almost anything else than that which fits them to become good wives. They learn a little music, a little French—how to write some how to talk a good deal-how to walk the streets on sunny afternoons-how to entertain their admirers at night-how to cry if their papa will not give them money—how to faint if their mothers mention the dishcloth. But it is folly to keep out of sight that they acquire these accomplishments because they are the most available that can be brought to the matrimonial market. There are a great many young ladies who work-who have to workwho spend no time in simpering and coquetting—who wash their gloves and iron their collars and knit their stockings, with their own hands. There are scores who despise dependence upon their hard-working fathers and mothers, and so learn trades, and work hard ten or twelve hours every day. They would cheerfully do housework, if young men would invite them to become their wives. But the young men seem to prefer the butterflies —the brainless do nothings, and the result is, that the class of girls we refer to—the young ladies of energy and industry, who would really help their husbands to accumulate wealth, live and die in single blessed

We have found very few young men in our life time who did not perceive the truth of what we are here saying. They have ac-knowledged thd working, industrious girls— the girls who work in shops or insist upon relieving their mothers of some of the cares and labors of housekeeping—are the girls to be married. But they are not the girls to flirt with at balls and parties; and so, while the young man has determined to marry one of them at last, he has sought the butterflies for present amusement. The amusement has had its effect. A few meetings in the ballroom—a few interviews at the social gather-ings—a few evening walks—and the working girl has been forgotten; the real prize is lost. Butterfly is carried home—an Irish girl is hired to wait upon her—the bills run up, and are not paid-ruin comes, in one shape or are not paid—ruin comes, in one shape or another—and then all the young men are in-vited to take warning. Their friend's mis-take is not seen; but the fact that he got married is taken as accounting for all his miseries. Ii he had married a woman, instead of a bundle of whalebone and millinery and crinoline, he would have got along well enough. Our belief is, that any man who takes care of himself can afford to get married —can afford to have some one to help him. Yet plain enough it is, that nobody but a millionaire can afford to marry one of the funny looking things we call ladies, which may be seen walking our streets any pleasant after-noon. The truth which needs to be preached just now is, that these "ladies" are educated and dressed for the market. If young men did not over-value them, we should not see them. They don't know much, it is true; but they do know what sort of a hook marriageable fishes like to swallow.

Facts About the Body.

There are about two hundred bones in the human body, exclusive of the teeth. These bones are composed of animal and earthly materials, the former predominating in youth and rendering f tle. The most important of these bones is the spine, which is composed of twenty-four small bones, called the verterbræ, one on top of the other, curiously hooked together and fastened on hand. by elastic ligaments, forming a pillar by which the human body is supported.

The bones are moved by the muscles, of which there are more than 500. The red meat or beef, the fat being excluded, is the muscular fabric of the ox. There are two sets of muscles, one to draw the bones one way, and another to draw them back again. We cannot better describe the muscles than comparing them to fine clastic thread bound up in their cases of skin. Many muscles terminate in tendons, which are stout cords, such as may be seen traversing the back of the hand, just without the skin, and which can be observed to move when the hand is open or shut. Every motion we make, even the involuntary one of breathing, is performed through the agency

In adults there are fifteen quarts of blood, each weighing about two pounds. This blood is of two kinds, arterial and venous. The first is the pure blood, as it leaves the heart to nourish the frame, and is of a bright vermillion color. The last is the blood as it runs to the heart loaded with the impurities of the body, to be there refined, and is of a purple hue.— Every pulsation of the heart sends out two ounces of arterial blood, and as there are from 70 to 80 heats in a minute, a hogshead of blood passes through the heart every hour. In fevers the pulsations are accelerated and consequently death ensues if the fever is not check-

The stomach is a boilor, if we may use such a figure, which drives the human engine.-Two sets of muscles, crossing each other turn the food over and over, churning it up in the gastric juice till it has been reduced to the nsistency of thin paste. This process requires from two to four hours.

Emerging from the stomach the food enters the small intestines, where it is mixed with the bile and pancreatic juice, and converted into obyle: These small intestines are twen-ty-four feet long, closely packed of course, and surrounded through their whole length with small tubes which are like sockets, and drawing off the chyle, empty into a large tube named the thoraic duct, which runs up the back and discharges the contents into the jugular vein, whence it passes to the heart to assist in forming the arterial blood.

The lungs are two bags connected with the open air by the windpipe, which branches in-to innumerable small tubes, all over the inside of the lungs, each terminating in a mi-nute air cell. The outer surface of these air cells is full of small capillaries, infinitely small veins, a thin membrane only dividing the air from the blood.

The impure portion of venous blood is car-bonic acid, which, having a stronger affinity for air than for blood, passes through this membrane to a gaseous state, combines with the air in the air cells, and is expelled with the next respiration. Meanwhile the oxygen of the air unites with the blood, and becomes of the air unites with the blood, and becomes purified; then passing into the heart, being mixed with chyle, it is forced through the body as life-giving and arterial blood.

The skin serves an important purpose in carrying off impurities of the system. It is traversed with capillaries of the body. It is also perforated with countless prespiration tubes, the united length of which amounts to twenty-eight miles, and which drains away to will the muscles to act. They branch out from the brain and spine over the whole frame in infinitely fine fibres, like branches or twigs o trees.
