

TO MY BOYS.

Boys! your lives are all before you. Be they short or they long— Whether good or ill to you, My eyes give you no more.

Should kind fortune's smiles attend you, Nor forget the kindred tie, And should fate's benevolent hand you, O'ing thoughts take a kindly view.

If success in life should wait, Be rich and some be poor, Let no richness make you airy, Never sound the poor one's door.

Time and chance may alter cases, And the rich one's soon be poor, While the poor one takes the place, That the rich one held before.

Should temptation lure a brother From the path he should pursue, Crush him not, but rather smother, Anger with affection there.

Blood than water sure is thicker, When its fountain is the same, Then kindness will not be thicker, And only kindred in name.

The time, my sons, is fast approaching, When I'll number with the dead; Then let me feel death's encroaching, And all the hopes of earth be fled.

From this weary world of ours, The victors are the just and true, If they'll unite their kindred powers, And each to each their duty do.

The Mobile Register tells the following: We happened to witness an amusing little incident which occurred in the wholesale dry goods establishment situated on the North West corner of St. Francis and Water streets, a day or two since, which was worth seeing.

A widow lady of our acquaintance has two little boys, aged about eight years—twins—who for comeliness and beauty, voice and action, would rival the celebrated twins of San Francisco. They are so much alike, that even their mother is at times puzzled to tell which is Willie and which is Walter.

One of them did something to annoy the other, and on account of the other's intractable likeness to each other, she recently came near losing one of them. She had occasion to administer a small dose of paregoric to Willie, and in a few minutes afterward Walter seemed to need something of the same sort. She turned back to a moment to get the medicine, but in that time the boys had got mixed, and by some means Willie swallowed another dose, and shortly afterwards went to bed and fell asleep. He continued in a stupor for some twenty or thirty hours, much to the astonishment and alarm of the mother, who saw that upon Walter the drug had no effect. It was not until Willie told her that she had given him two doses, that she discovered the mistake. But to the incident.

The mother, having some business to transact in the store, took the two boys with her. They were dressed exactly alike, and during the stay of their mother, they each took a stand in separate rooms fronting on Water street, to see what was to be seen. While standing there, an old gentleman, who was walking slowly by, saw one of them; and struck by the little fellow's intelligent countenance and healthy look, stopped and asked him his name.

"My name is Willie, sir," replied the little one. "Ah! a very pretty name, and a very pretty boy," said the old gent, patting him on the head.

"Here's a dime for you." Passing on to the next door he observed Walter standing in the same position. He occupied, and supposing it was Willie who had run there, he stopped and asked him the same question.

"Do you live in Mobile, Willie?" asked the old gent. "My name ain't Willie," said Walter. "Why, didn't you just now tell me at the other door that your name was Willie?"

"No, sir, my name is Walter." "Oh, I thought you said 'Willie'; a while ago, when you stood in the other door, and I gave you a dime."

"I ain't been in the other door, and you didn't give me no dime," said Walter. "The old gentleman looked at him a moment, as though the good opinion he had formed was fast changing, and then walked slowly back to Willie's door. The old gent looked at him steadily.

"Ah! Walter," said he, "you shouldn't tell stories. Bad children tell stories. You must be a good boy, Walter."

"I ain't told no stories, sir, and my name ain't Walter; my name's Willie," said the confused little fellow.

"Well, what made you say, at the other door, that your name was Walter, and that I didn't give you a dime?"

"I never said no, sir," said Willie, and I ain't been in the other door."

"Why, you precious little scamp," said the old man, somewhat excited, "what do you mean? At this door you're Willie; at the other you're Walter. Here, you say I gave you a dime; there, you say I didn't. Here you say you haven't been at the other door; there, you say you haven't been at this. You should be ashamed of yourself, sir. When you grow up to be a man—"

Just here Walter, who had heard the loud talking, walked round to Willie's side, and took the two stood, in front of the old man, who was perfectly bewildered. He soon comprehended the whole matter, however, and when he did, he took the dime back from Willie, and gave them a half dollar each.

An old man in Indiana recently overhauled his daughter, nineteen years old, for wearing hoops. "That would be rather a large job, for either father or mother to do, in this country. We don't think mother would do well to try it for fear it might interfere with their own circles."

The Syracuse Courier tells of a conductor who carried a passenger past his place of destination, and then charged him fare to the next station, and five cents extra because he did not purchase his ticket before taking his seat in the cars.

CONVULSIVE AFFECTION—An incident came to our knowledge the other day which speaks strongly in favor of the depth and undying character of affection. A married woman in our city had the misfortune to lose her husband a few days since, and while thinking over her domestic condition, and the prospect of a dreary, lonely winter, and estimating how much her funds would be absorbed in the funeral expenses of her deceased, she was interrupted by the call of a young son of Esculapio, who, after some little chaffing, proposed to her the lady a good round sum, to be paid to her the day after the funeral. The widow thought, and finally accepted the offer. A day or two afterward, however, upon the receipt of some of her friends who came to sympathize with her in her affliction, the widow said it was not as bad as it might have been, as she had sold her husband's body, and filled her cellar with good brandy, and bought with the proceeds—Dat. Republic.

Foot being once annoyed by a poor fiddler, "frustrating his discord" under his window, sent him a billiard, with a request that he would play elsewhere, as one screeper at the door was sufficient.

An Irishman, who had laid sick a long time, one day met by the parish priest, when the following conversation took place: "Well, Patrick, I am glad you have recovered—but were you ever afraid to meet your God?" "Oh, no, your reverendness, it was the other chap I was afraid of," replied Pat.

"Pat, you fool, why do you jest after that rabbit in that manner, when your gun has no lock on it? Hush! ye spalpeen—do ye stabel, now the rabbit don't know that!"
