Over the backs of these a huge fellow strides with a hammer having a long handle, and with this he hits the hog upon the skull. One blow is sufficient; a faint squeal, a shiver and all is over. The hog does not fall; he cannot fall; he is wedged up by living hogs. Sometimes the one blow is not sufficient, and the butcher strikes until one can hear the thick shull sinking with a "thud" under the blow. So soon as he finishes his pen, the door is thrown
